Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to run a business operation and covers the steps required to develop and implement a business plan. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals who are running an organisation or who take a senior role in determining the effective functioning and success of the organisation. As such, they may oversee the work of a number of teams and other managers. Business plans are critical tools for business growth and development. They will vary depending on the needs of the organisation. This unit covers the typical elements of a business plan and the standard approaches to be used in implementing a business plan. The business plan should be supported by a strategic plan, and may also be supported by a marketing plan and cash flow forecasts.

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
4. Gather data and information from respondents	4.1. Prepare and arrange resources for data gathering 4.2. Gather data and information using survey tools 4.3. Record data and information gathered in approved formats, in accordance with organisational procedures 4.4. Store and safeguard survey information and data in accordance with organisational procedures
5. Analyse research information	5.1. Conduct checks on quality of data and information collected 5.2. Select appropriate techniques to summarise data and information 5.3. Design software files for entering data and information 5.4. Process data using a method appropriate to research design 5.5. Interpret and aggregate data and information including categorisation, to provide observations relevant to research objectives
6. Prepare research reports	6.1. Collate and assess findings for relevance and usefulness to research objectives 6.2. Prepare research reports 6.3. Communicate research findings to relevant personnel and stakeholders in accordance with organisational procedures

Required Skills and Knowledge

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- culturally appropriate communication skills to relate to people from diverse backgrounds and people with diverse abilities
- information management skills to categorise, store and retrieve market research information
- innovation and creativity skills to conceptualise, test and refine qualitative and quantitative questionnaires and other tools
- literacy skills to prepare reports containing complex ideas

  • use of survey instruments
• requirements of house or other style manuals or protocols for written communication.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • developing and implementing a market research survey tool • accurately recording and securely storing survey data in accordance with organisational procedures

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• utilising a range of methodologies to analyse market research information • documenting market research activities and findings in a research report.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to office equipment and resources including computer hardware and software • access to exemplar survey tools and recently used survey tools.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • analysis of survey tools • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of data collection techniques • observation of presentations of market research results • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge and understanding • review of authenticated documents from the workplace or training environment • review of testimony from team members, colleagues, supervisors or managers.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other marketing units.

BSBMKG409A Design direct response offers

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to design, implement and evaluate direct response offers which match organisational business and marketing objectives and resolve marketing problems. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals working in a marketing assistant or account manager role who are required to design direct marketing offers for products or services. Such individuals may work in small, medium or large enterprises across a variety of industries; they usually work with a team and customers to design offers. Direct response offers include payment related promises such as offers in relation to exchanging goods and services for money; terms of payment; performance and quality guarantees; delivery method; and time, place and method of order placement. Offers may also be made that do not involve payment matters, such as the offer of a free brochure or catalogue in return for providing a name and address.

3. Select offer pricing structure	3.1. Evaluate factors affecting pricing to determine normal or average selling price of offer 3.2. Determine short-term pricing strategies 3.3. Select payment term options
4. Determine and design required customer service levels	4.1. Design process that ensures accepted offers are fulfilled promptly 4.2. Develop procedures to ensure prompt answers to queries and complaints regarding product or service 4.3. Ensure access to instant, accurate information about status of delivery of products or services and customer accounts, including after-hours, to provide enhanced customer service

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- creativity and innovation skills to design a range of direct response offers which elicit interest and response from customers
- culturally appropriate communication skills to relate to people from diverse backgrounds and people with diverse abilities
- interpersonal skills to build relationships with clients
- numeracy skills to determine pricing of offers
- organisational and time management skills to sequence tasks and to meet time lines
- problem-solving skills to provide solutions to customer requirements and to solve organisational direct marketing problems

Required knowledge

- teamwork skills to develop and refine direct response offers in response to customer feedback
- technology skills to use a range of office equipment (telephones, internet) and software (databases) to formulate and refine direct response offers.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • designing and testing a range of direct response offers which meet organisational marketing objectives • developing a pricing structure, customer service levels and relevant support materials for at least one product or service • presenting a direct response offer for a product or service.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to office equipment and resources.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • assessment of examples of direct response offers • demonstration of design, testing and refinement techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of presentations • oral or written questioning • review of authenticated documents from the workplace or training environment • review of testimony from team members, colleagues, supervisors or managers • tests of knowledge on offer component, offer type, pricing structure, customer service and creative options for direct response offers.

BSBMKG410A Test direct marketing activities

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to design, construct and implement a direct marketing test program, analyse its outcomes, and act upon its findings in order to increase the likely success of direct marketing activities. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals working in a marketing assistant or account manager role who are required to design and test direct marketing activities in relation to a product or service. They may work in small, medium or large enterprises in a variety of industries and typically undertake controlled experiments to test direct marketing activities before designing and implementing the activity. The results of such testing can be analysed to predict the likely success of the proposed direct marketing activities. Direct marketing experiments may include testing the offer, media, communication, timing or response components of direct marketing activities.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to strategically manage the marketing process and marketing personnel within an organisation. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to senior marketing professionals who are responsible for managing the overall marketing process of an organisation and for managing marketing personnel. Typically they would manage a portfolio of products or services across the organisation, rather than a single product or few products. This unit targets more senior personnel who have a wider scope of marketing activities for a greater number of products or services, than BSBMKG514A Implement and monitor marketing activities.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to evaluate the international environment, to identify market factors and risks, and to assess the viability of international marketing opportunities. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to senior marketing or management personnel who are required to evaluate the international business environment in preparation for entering an international or export market for the first time, or to identify new marketing opportunities in markets in which their organisation already has a presence. This unit is different to BSBMKG501B Identify and evaluate marketing opportunities, which applies to senior marketing or general managers evaluating domestic marketing opportunities. While the underlying principles of the units are similar, this unit covers the increased complexity of the global business environment, and the cultural differences and international trade agreements to be addressed when conducting business internationally.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to conduct a strategic analysis to develop organisational marketing objectives. This involves reviewing the organisation's internal and external environments, evaluating past and current marketing performance, and exploring and evaluating new marketing opportunities. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to senior marketing professionals who are responsible for providing strategic direction to the marketing function of an organisation. Their responsibilities include analysing information on the internal and external business and marketing environment; examining current marketing performance; identifying new marketing opportunities arising from emerging trends; and devising strategies to achieve overall business objectives. Individuals operating at this level will generally conduct these activities using information gathered by people working under their direct and indirect supervision at lower levels of the organisation. This unit should be assessed either before or in conjunction with BSBMKG609A Develop a marketing plan, which covers the skills and knowledge to devise specific marketing strategies and tactics arising from formulation of marketing objectives.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to enhance project outcomes through contributing to quality planning, applying quality policies and procedures and contributing to continuous improvement within projects. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to a project team member working under the direction of a project manager with other project team members. The individual may be operating within an organisation or as a consultant. The skills should be applied in the context of multiple complex projects, with the individual operating as part of a specialist project management team. In the context of this unit a complex project is defined as a project which involves: • the need for a comprehensive and multi faceted project plan • the need for a formal internal or external communications strategy • a dedicated and diverse project budget • multiple administrative components • multiple operational components • a wide range of stakeholders • a project operations team. The functions performed by a worker managing a straightforward project or a section of a larger project

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • application of quality management and continuous improvement techniques in relation to multiple complex projects • knowledge of quality auditing processes and requirements.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to examples of project management documentation used for quality control purposes • access to project team records.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following assessment methods are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies for managing project quality and their application to different situations • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios which present issues and problems in project quality management • review of records documented and maintained • evaluation of documented results of project activities and product performance • evaluation of reports developed about shortfalls in quality outcomes.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other units from the Certificate IV in Project Management.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to contribute to the control of a project's scope by assisting with identifying its objectives, deliverables, constraints, assumptions and outcomes; and by applying controls once the project has commenced.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to a project practitioner working in a project support role.

The individual may be operating in a large or small organisation and applying skills in the context of enterprise projects.

The project practitioner may be part of a project team under the direction of a project manager, or may work as part of a smaller scale self-directed team.

This unit has generic application to a range of industries and organisations and a range of projects, from simple to complex.

In the context of this unit a project is defined as involving:

- a practical and comprehensive project plan
- a documented communications strategy
- a detailed project budget
- strategic engagement with stakeholders

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- a risk, issues and change-management methodology
- a quality plan with assurance and control processes
- a supportive team-based environment.

The functions performed in project work, where formal project management methodology is not the main focus, are covered by BSBPMG522A Undertake project work.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

2. Apply project scope controls	2.1 Undertake work according to agreed project scope-management plan and by using established change-control procedures and performance-measurement procedures
	2.2 Communicate instances of non-compliance with overall scope to the project manager and other team members
3. Contribute to review of scope controls	3.1 Measure progress to determine potential, perceived and actual scope changes
	3.2 Appropriately report scope changes
	3.3 Assist in the review of project outcomes to determine the effectiveness of initial and subsequent scope-management approaches

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- literacy skills to:
  - document agreed components of scope-management plan
  - interpret potentially complex project plans and documentation
  - report on project progress as required
- numeracy skills to:
  - measure and control project scope
  - review project timeframes and deliverables
- learning skills to identify training requirements necessary for effective consultation and scope management
- planning and organising skills to:
  - measure progress against agreed objectives
  - monitor and respond to compliance issues
- self-management skills to manage multiple tasks and ensure project progresses on time
- teamwork and communication skills to liaise with other members of the project team on a range of project scope-management issues and challenges.

Required knowledge

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- components of a project scope-management plan
- factors likely to impact on project scope
- formal change-control processes
- methods for measuring work outcomes and progress against plans
- methods for segmenting and documenting a work breakdown structure
- procedures for reporting scope change
- types of project initiation documentation.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • contributing to monitoring and control of project scope • recording project scope-management plan • interpreting project initiation documentation for the purposes of documenting project scope.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to project documentation, which includes information about project scope.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Project initiation documentation may include:	• approved project charter or mandate • business case • changes to internal or external organisations, legislation and/or regulations • documentation accessed through various accessibility modes • feasibility study • minutes of management or executive decisions • organisation strategic and business plans • outcomes and recommendations of associated projects.
Project objectives and requirements may include:	• specifications for products and/or services • statements in measurable format.
Project deliverables may include:	• discrete products, outputs and services defined in the project scope • high-level aggregations in the work breakdown structure.
Scope-management plan may include:	• activities and tasks in the work breakdown structure • constraints, assumptions and exclusions • deliverables • high-level risk identification • key personnel • preferred work organisation • project benefits and outcomes • project objectives.
Relevant project authority may include:	• other body or person with delegated authority under project governance arrangements • project manager • project steering committee
Change-control procedures may include:	• adjusting project scope documentation in response to scope changes approved by relevant authority • identifying and monitoring designated elements of the project scope likely to change

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• identifying and monitoring pressures that may influence scope creep • maintaining scope change documentation for project audit.
Performance-measurement procedures may include:	• using tools and techniques to manage and measure project progress in terms of time and resources.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • creating a work breakdown structure • creating a project schedule showing tasks, deliverable milestones, sequence, dependencies and time estimates • applying time-management techniques to a project • applying tools and techniques to monitor and update project schedules.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • workplace documentation, such as diaries, progress reports, spreadsheets, scheduling software and other planning tools with timeframes linked to deliverables.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of candidate's on-the-job project time management • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios addressing project issues and problems in project time management • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies, tools and techniques for managing project time and their particular applications • review of techniques used to measure, record and report progress of activities in relation to agreed schedules and plans • assessment of changes implemented to the schedule and the updating of plans to accommodate changing situations throughout the project.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.
Work breakdown structure may include:	• activity and task descriptors • high-level deliverables framework • multi-level task granulation • work breakdown task dictionary
Estimating the duration and effort may include:	• allowance for contingency and risk • availability of resources and supplies • degree of variation • expert opinion • level of accuracy • prior project history • regulations and standards governing resource performance • top-down or bottom-up estimating
Sequence and dependencies may include:	• deliverable milestones • preferred, logical or required order of task completion • relationship between tasks impacting on start and finish times and dates
Project scheduling tools and techniques may include:	• bar charts • critical chain management • critical path diagrams • Gantt charts • project schedule network diagrams • standalone, organisation-integrated or cloud-based software tools
Schedule impact may include:	• accuracy of estimates • advances or delays in task completion • changes to project risk • changes to resources and costs • degree of change to baseline • relevance of task dependencies
Review of project performance may occur at:	• agreed major milestones, e.g. phases, subcontracts • change of key personnel • completion of major deliverables • finalisation of project and other agreed milestones

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • applying quality-management and continuous-improvement techniques in a project relevant to the organisation and industry context • applying quality processes and procedures in a project • clarifying quality requirements with stakeholders • identifying external standards, legislation and regulations • maintaining accurate quality records.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • examples of project documentation used for quality-management purposes • project records.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following assessment methods are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies for managing project quality and their application to different situations • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios that present issues and problems in project quality management • review of records documented and maintained • evaluation of documented results of project activities and product performance

	• evaluation of reports developed about shortfalls in quality outcomes.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Quality requirements may include:	• acceptable tolerances and variation to specifications • explicit and implicit performance expectations • product and service specifications.
Quality criteria may include:	• Australian and international standards • codes of conduct • industry and organisational policies and practices • legislation and regulation requirements.
Information may include:	• designated standard operating procedures and regulations • organisation and project standards • organisational quality-management policy and guidelines as applied to specific requirements of a project • project quality guidelines and instructions.
Quality assurance may include:	• project finalisation process to capture lessons learned and to enable continuous improvement • systematic review of the project-management process to ensure compliance with organisational policy and guidelines.

Quality-management tools and methodologies may include:	• methodologies, including:
	  • continuous improvement process
	  • lean management
	  • Six Sigma
	  • Total Quality Management
	• tools, including:
	  • cause and effect diagram (fishbone, Ishikawa)
	  • control charts
	  • flowcharting

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to assist in producing a project budget, to monitor project expenditure and to contribute to cost finalisation processes.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to a project practitioner working in a project support role.

The individual may be operating in a large or small organisation and applying skills in the context of enterprise projects.

The project practitioner may be part of a project team under the direction of a project manager, or may work as part of a smaller scale self-directed team.

This unit has generic application to a range of industries and organisations and a range of projects, from simple to complex.

In the context of this unit a project is defined as involving:

- a practical and comprehensive project plan
- a documented communications strategy
- a detailed project budget
- strategic engagement with stakeholders
- a risk, issues and change-management methodology
- a quality plan with assurance and control processes

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Risk-analysis methods may include:	• risk categorisation • risk data quality assessment • risk likelihood and consequence ranking • risk urgency assessment.
Risk-management strategies may include:	• accepting some or all of the consequences of a particular risk • avoiding the risk • mitigating the likelihood of the risk • sharing risk with another party • transferring risk to another party.
Risk-management plans may include:	• definitions of risk likelihood and consequence • identified risks • methodologies • risk categories and priorities • risk context for project • roles and responsibilities in regard to risk management • stakeholder tolerances • tools for determining risk rank and priority • tracking risks.
Monitoring risks may include:	• recommended corrective actions • recommended preventative actions • requested changes • reserve analysis • risk audits • risk reassessment • risk register and updates • status meetings • technical performance information • variance and trend analysis.
Risk-management approaches may include:	• risk identification • risk quantification • risk response control • risk response development.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Delegated authority may be:	• subject to frequent change in different project contexts • under limited guidance and supervision • within agreed authorisation and limits • within established organisational framework, procedures and routines.
Risk-contingency measures may include:	• alternative project plans and approaches • degree of acceptable variation • planning for risk • project planning tolerances.
Opportunities may include:	• better means of achieving a result • changes in the project or broader environment that offer scope for rescheduling activities to better effect • efficiencies or methods to work more effectively, such as ways of shortening an activity • initial project activities that reveal entirely different sets of priorities, for example product development, research and policy development • responses to changing commercial or competitive conditions.
Risk records may include:	• lists of potential risk events • project and/or organisation files and records • risk analysis and reappraisal • risk diaries, risk registers, incident logs, occurrence reports and other such documentation • risk-management lessons learned • risk-management plan.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • examples of project procurement documentation • records of project team participation in procurement tasks and activities.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following assessment methods are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • analysis of responses addressing different case studies and scenarios that present issues and problems in project procurement • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies for project procurement and contracting, and their application to different situations • review of procurement and contract-management plans and other documentation associated with procurement processes • evaluation of information gathered on potential suppliers • assessment of recommendations made to assist in selecting preferred contractors • assessment of reports produced about contracting and procurement-management issues.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Procurement requirements may include:	• product and service definitions
	• quality specifications
	• resource identification
	• supply and delivery requirements
	• supply and engagement metrics, including:
	  • employment equity
	  • environmental
	  • intellectual property
	  • legal
	  • licences, permits and certifications
	  • security
	  • work health and safety (WHS)
	• work breakdown structure.

Delegated authority may be:	• subject to frequent change in a multi-disciplinary environment • under limited guidance and supervision • within agreed authorisation and limits • within established organisational framework, procedures and routines.
Procurement-management plan may include:	• acquisition criteria • contract administration • contract closure processes • general conditions of contract • organisational procurement policy and procedures • preferred suppliers

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• procurement-management processes • procurement statements of work • product and quality specifications • project resource requirements • supplier selection criteria • statement of works • type of supply and contract arrangements.
Procurement documentation may include:	• assets and disposal actions • lists of suppliers • procurement logs and registers • procurement reports • quotes, invoices and receipts • records of contract planning, formation, negotiation and administration • test and acceptance results.
Suppliers may include:	• consultant • contractor • subcontractor • vendor.
Probity and project governance constraints may include:	• ethical behaviours • limits of authority • organisational policy and procedures • prescribed decision escalation.

Contractual documentation may include:	• terms and conditions of contract
	• type of supply contract:
	  • cost plus
	  • fixed price contract
	  • good and services quotation
	  • time and material.

Procurement activities may include:	• audit of environmentally sustainable supply practices • collaborating with agencies and alliances • conducting transfer and disposal actions • confirming details and obtaining additional information about quotes • formally receipting goods and services • identifying WHS issues • liaising with client, contractors, subcontractors and other stakeholders • maintaining registers and lists • obtaining approvals • obtaining quotes from potential suppliers

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to assist in implementing project management life cycle processes.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to a project practitioner working in a project support role.

The individual may be operating in a large or small organisation and applying skills in the context of enterprise projects.

The project practitioner may be part of a project team under the direction of a project manager, or may work as part of a smaller scale self-directed team.

This unit has generic application to a range of industries and organisations and a range of projects, from simple to complex.

In the context of this unit a project is defined as involving:

- a practical and comprehensive project plan
- a documented communications strategy
- a detailed project budget
- strategic engagement with stakeholders
- a risk, issues and change-management methodology
- a quality plan with assurance and control processes
- a supportive team-based environment.

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • demonstrating scope management for a project of sufficient complexity • knowledge of scope-management plans, tools, issues and likely challenges.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to workplace documentation used to document and manage project scope • consideration of feedback from project stakeholders regarding the management of project scope.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies for managing project scope and their application in different situations • analysis of responses in addressing case studies and scenarios that present project scope-management issues and problems • observation of demonstrated techniques in negotiating changes to scope • review of scope-management plan • assessment of documentation related to scope-management issues and recommended improvements.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Project authorisation may:	• already have been decided before involvement of the project manager • be in the form of a scope statement briefly explaining why the project has been formed, what it hopes to achieve and how success will be measured • be required at a number of critical review points during the project.
Appropriate authority may include:	• client, owner, sponsor, senior executive or other individual or group vested with the authority to make decisions regarding the project • having the capacity to make decisions regarding commitment of funds, resources and priorities.
Project delegations and authorities may include:	• consultative expectations • degree of line authority with project team • finance expenditure limits • procurement delegations • required organisational procedures.
Boundaries may include:	• assumptions • constraints • exclusions • inclusions • principal work activities • product specification • project deliverables • project objectives • scope of works • work breakdown structure.
Relevant stakeholders may include:	• clients • decision makers • internal and external parties • sponsors • team members.
Scope management may	• determining that a scope change has occurred or is about to occur

include:	• identifying and reporting scope creep • identifying factors influencing changes to scope • implementing agreed scope changes • monitoring and reporting the effect of scope changes on other areas and on achievement of project objectives • refining scope progressively throughout the project life cycle • seeking authorisation for changes to project scope.
Change-control procedures may include:	• formal agreements, for example contracts, subcontracts and memoranda of understanding • major elements of the project likely to change, for example design, engineering and finance • project documentation, including plans, schedules, statements, directives, guidelines and instructions.

Release 1	This version first released with BSB07 Business Services Training Package Version 8.0. Replaces BSBPMG503A Manage project time.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage time in projects. It involves determining and implementing the project schedule, and assessing time-management outcomes.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to those responsible for managing and leading a project in an organisation, business or as a consultant.

The project manager operates within assigned authority levels, and is responsible for own performance and the performance of others.

The project manager may undertake the work in the context of an organisation program and/or portfolio of projects.

This unit has generic application for projects in a range of industries, organisations and contexts.

In the context of this unit a project is defined as involving:

- a comprehensive, detailed and integrated project management plan
- a formal communications plan
- a dedicated and project-based budget
- formal and planned engagement with a wide range of stakeholders
- a documented risk, issues and change-management methodology

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Determine project schedule	1.1 Develop the work breakdown structure with sufficient detail to enable effective planning and control 1.2 Estimate the duration and effort, sequence and dependencies of tasks to achieve project deliverables 1.3 Use project-scheduling tools and techniques to identify schedule impact on project time management, resource requirements, costs and risks 1.4 Contribute to achieving an agreed schedule baseline and communication of the schedule to stakeholders
2. Implement project schedule	2.1 Implement mechanisms to measure, record and report progress of activities in relation to the agreed schedule 2.2 Conduct ongoing analysis to identify baseline variance

	2.3. Analyse and forecast the impact of changes to the schedule 2.4 Review progress throughout the project life cycle and implement agreed schedule changes 2.5 Develop responses to potential or actual schedule changes and implement them to maintain project objectives
3. Assess time-management outcomes	3.1 Review schedule performance records to determine the effectiveness of time-management activities 3.2 Identify and document time-management issues and recommend improvements

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to review and evaluate process
- communication skills to:
  - convey expectations
  - advise others of progress
- literacy skills to read, develop and interpret project schedules
- planning and organising skills to sequence tasks and see that objectives are met
- technology skills to use appropriate software to develop project schedules.

Required knowledge

- estimation techniques to determine task duration and resource effort
- procedures for identifying critical path
- procedures for managing project baselines, establishment and variance
- project life cycle phases and what is included in each phase
- time-management methodologies, and their capabilities, limitations, application and outcomes
- tools and techniques for project schedules
- work breakdown structures and application to project schedules.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Work breakdown structure may include:	• activity and task descriptors • high-level deliverables framework • multi-level task granulation • work breakdown task dictionary.
Estimating the duration and effort may include:	• allowance for contingency and risk • availability of resources and supplies • degree of variation • expert opinion • level of accuracy • prior project history • regulations and standards governing resource performance • top-down or bottom-up estimating.
Project-scheduling tools and techniques may include:	• bar charts • conducting or supervising qualitative and/or quantitative time analysis, such as schedule simulation, decision analysis, contingency planning and 'what if' scenarios • critical chain management • critical path diagrams • Gantt charts • project schedule network diagrams • standalone, organisation-integrated or cloud-based software tools • using personal experience and/or subject matter experts • using specialist time-analysis tools to assist in the decision-making process.
Schedule impact may include:	• accuracy of estimates • advances or delays in task completion • changes to project risk • changes to resources and cost

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical and organising skills to manage information and review project outcomes
- literacy skills to write reports and communicate key issues
- technology skills to facilitate effective communication.

Required knowledge

- alternative communication methods and media applications
- project-management information systems and their various applications.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Delegated authority means that activities may:	• be conducted routinely or as changing circumstances dictate • be done independently within broad guidance • involve consultation with other project members, teams and internal stakeholders • involve taking a lead role in a team where required • involve the selection, use and supervision of appropriate communication-management methods and tools • take into account internal organisational change and external environmental change.

Communication management plan may include:	• communication strategy, including:
	  • allocated responsibility
	  • frequency
	  • media used
	  • type
	• objectives
	• organisational chart
	• organisational communication policy and procedures
	• responsibilities
	• stakeholder communication expectations
	• stakeholder segmentation against interests, power and influence
	• target audience
	• type of project reporting.

Project-management information system:	• is a means of communicating knowledge about the project
	• provides a systematic approach to the storage, searching and retrieval of information relevant to the project
	• may include:
	  • access authority levels
	  • complex computer-based systems
	  • data ownership considerations
	  • modified systems to cater for unique project requirements
	  • privacy considerations
	  • simple manual systems.

Communication	• client organisation

networks may include:	• community groups
	• end users
	• formal networks
	• informal networks
	• internet and intranet-based
	• lobby groups
	• organisation's communication networks
	• project governance bodies, including:
	  • expert groups
	  • project directorate
	  • reference groups
	  • steering committees
	  • task teams
	  • working groups
	• social media.

BSBPMG521A Manage project integration

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This version first released with BSB07 Business Services Training Package Version 8.0. Replaces BSBPMG501A Manage application of project integrative processes.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to integrate and balance the overall project management functions of scope, time, cost, quality, human resources, communications, risk and procurement across the project life cycle; and to align and track the project objectives to comply with organisational goals, strategies and objectives.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to those responsible for managing and leading a project in an organisation, business or as a consultant.

The project manager operates within assigned authority levels, and is responsible for own performance and the performance of others.

The project manager may undertake the work in the context of an organisational program and/or portfolio of projects.

This unit has generic application for projects in a range of industries, organisations and contexts.

In the context of this unit a project is defined as involving:

- a comprehensive, detailed and integrated project management plan
- a formal communications plan
- a dedicated and project-based budget

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- formal and planned engagement with a wide range of stakeholders
- a documented risk, issues and change-management methodology
- a quality plan with assurance and control processes
- a project team-based environment.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- decision-making skills between competing interests and priorities
- literacy skills to interpret and develop complex project plans and documentation
- negotiating skills to work with stakeholders and project authorities on agreed plans and processes
- numeracy skills to conduct complex forecasting
- planning and organising skills to:
  - plan, monitor and respond to project issues
  - measure progress against agreed plans
- team leadership and communication skills to liaise with other members of the project team
- technology skills to use common software and work office products for documentation and analysis
- time-management skills to ensure priorities are addressed.

Required knowledge

- project governance models
- project knowledge areas
- project life cycle stages, phases and structures relevant to industry and project context
- types of organisational documentation for strategies and goals.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • identifying and aligning project with organisational objectives • conducting project establishment processes • managing preparation of a project management plan for a project of sufficient complexity to demonstrate the full range of performance requirements • ensuring project registers and logs are maintained • analysing project reports • undertaking impact analysis • preparing strategy for project finalisation.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • project documentation, which includes information about participation in life cycle and integration processes.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • analysis of responses addressing different project scenarios • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of project life cycle processes relevant to the industry sector and project context • assessment of management of the project life cycle processes.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Project initiation documentation may include:	• agreed project management framework • agreed project methodology • client or customer requirements • concept proposal • contract documentation • executive team instructions

	• feasibility study • life cycle approval gateways • output from prior project.
Broader organisational strategies and goals may include:	• market focus • organisational mission statement • strategy plans • values and ethics
Objectives, outcomes and benefits may include:	• expected benefits to be achieved for organisation and business • measurable project product statement • short and long-term outcomes for the organisation.
Project governance structure may include:	• boards, committees, working groups, reference groups, advisory groups, sponsors, project managers, project team members and stakeholders • identified authority levels assigned to groups and individuals • issue-escalation procedures • project organisation chart • statements of roles for project management bodies and participants.
Project charter may include:	• approvals and sign-off • broad stakeholder identification • consolidated project initiation documentation (PID) • documented objectives • high-level product deliverables • high-level risk assessment • project assumptions and constraints • project mandate • source of project authority.
Project deliverables may include:	• definable product, service or document • discrete components of the overall project outputs • specified products of the project • time, quality and cost.
Project management functions involve all nine functions:	• communications • cost • human resources • procurement and contracting • project integration • quality • risk • scope • time.
Triple constraints	• cost

include:	• scope and quality • time.
Project management plan may be:	• a covering document that integrates the planning requirements of the nine functions of project management • in single or multiple document format.
Integrates may include:	• decisions that: • determine comparative value • evaluate competing interests • make trade-offs • processes and activities that: • combine • coordinate • define • identify • unify
Associated plans and baselines may include:	• communications plan (stakeholders and information) • human resources plan • procurement plan • project budget • project schedule • quality-management plan • risk plan • scope-management plan.
Internal work environment may include:	• organisational policy and procedures • organisational culture and style • physical working conditions • geographic location and/or dispersion • team dynamics.
Status reports may include:	• client progress reports • internal or external • regular consolidated reports to project authority • reports under contractual obligations • specific budget and schedule reports.
Impact analysis may include:	• assessment against project quality requirements • forecasting against triple constraints (scope, time and cost) • review of project baselines against proposed change.
Project logs and registers may include:	• change log • daily log • issues log • quality log • risk register

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• task-completion log • version-control log.
Project finalisation activities may include:	• completing financial transactions • consolidating and storing project data • documenting outstanding project issues • obtaining or providing certifications • preparing final project reports • updating organisation knowledge management.
Associated documentation may include:	• 'as built' design specifications • certificates, guarantees, indemnities and warranties • product or service specifications • user, training and installation manuals.
Project review assessments may include:	• benefits realisation review • outcomes evaluation • post-implementation review • project lessons learned.

Release 1	This version first released with BSB07 Business Services Training Package Version 8.0. Replaces BSBPMG510A Manage projects.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to undertake a straightforward project or a section of a larger project. This unit addresses the management of projects, including developing a project plan, administering and monitoring the project, finalising the project, and reviewing the project to identify lessons learned for application to future projects.

Application of the Unit

The unit focuses on the application of project-management skills and the requirement to meet timelines, quality standards, budgetary limits and other requirements set for the project.

The unit does not apply to specialist project managers. For specialist project managers, the other units of competency in the project management field (BSBPMG) will be applicable.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

	resources and quality 3.5 Complete and forward project reports as required to stakeholders 3.6 Undertake risk management as required to ensure project outcomes are met 3.7 Achieve project deliverables
4. Finalise project	4.1 Complete financial record keeping associated with project and check for accuracy 4.2 Ensure transition of staff involved in project to new roles or reassignment to previous roles 4.3 Complete project documentation and obtain necessary sign-offs for concluding project
5. Review project	5.1 Review project outcomes and processes against the project scope and plan 5.2 Involve team members in the project review 5.3 Document lessons learned from the project and report within the organisation

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication and negotiation skills to work with team members and other stakeholders to maintain project schedules
- communication skills to relate to people with diverse abilities and from diverse backgrounds in a culturally appropriate way
- literacy skills to read, write and review a range of documentation
- numeracy skills to:
  - analyse data
  - compare time lines and promotional costs against budgets
- planning and organising skills to develop, monitor and maintain implementation schedules.

Required knowledge

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- organisation's mission, goals, objectives and operations and how the project relates to them
- organisational structure, and lines of authority and communication in the organisation
- relevant legislation and codes from all levels of government that may affect aspects of business operations, including:
  - anti-discrimination legislation
  - codes of practice
  - environmental issues
  - ethical principles
  - WHS
  - privacy laws.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • developing a project plan • examples of monitoring arrangements and evaluation of the efficacy of the project plan in addressing project time lines and budget • knowledge of relevant legislation.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to workplace project documentation • demonstration of all required skills, knowledge and performance in a workplace-based project.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of presentations

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of the organisation's mission, goals, objectives and operations and how the project relates to them • review of project risk-management plan and project plan • evaluation of project reports forwarded to stakeholders • analysis of documentation reviewing project outcomes and processes against the project scope and plan • evaluation of documentation outlining lessons learned from the project.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other project management units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Project scope and other relevant documentation may include:	• contract or other agreement
	• project brief
	• project plan or summary
	• other documents outlining:
	  • expected outcomes of the project
	  • inclusions and exclusions from project
	  • project resources
	  • quality standards for project
	  • timeframes for project.

Stakeholders may include:	• clients or customers (internal and external) • funding bodies • management, employees and relevant key personnel (internal and external) with special responsibilities • project sponsor.
Delegating authority may include:	• customer or client • funding body • manager or management representative

BSBPMG601A Direct the integration of projects

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage the integration of all functions of project management in a program or multiple project context. This covers managing conflicting priorities between projects, directing project managers in re aligning projects within the program, directing the internal environment with the needs and expectations of the external environment, and directing projects within the program throughout their life cycle. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	A program is defined as a set of interrelated projects, each of which has a project manager. Multiple projects (sometimes called a portfolio of projects) refers to a number of projects related in some way and managed by the same person as a program to achieve a common organisational objective/s. For the purposes of this unit someone who manages a suite of projects (a program) will be referred to as a program manager. The functions performed by a project manager to manage integration within individual projects are addressed in BSBPMG501A Manage application of project integrative processes.

	project plans into a structured, cohesive program plan for ongoing program management 1.4. Derive integrated program control mechanisms from project plans, to establish program control requirements 1.5. Use project plans to develop consolidated program budgets, schedules and interdependencies, and to identify program risks
2. Direct the internal project environment to meet external needs and expectations	2.1. Direct the internal project working environment to ensure project managers' work is conducted effectively throughout multiple, aligned project life cycles 2.2. Establish and maintain links to direct the alignment between projects and organisational objectives within the program 2.3. Evaluate project proposals (scope definitions) against the organisation's strategic objectives 2.4. Coordinate and direct conflicting requirements of individual projects to achieve program objectives 2.5. Modify, where necessary, individual project objectives to achieve overall program objectives 2.6. Coordinate the impact of external environmental influences on individual projects to achieve program objectives
3. Direct projects throughout project life cycles	3.1. Direct all project managers to provide project phases, approval points, review points and other milestones, to allow program integration 3.2. Establish project baselines and report progress in relation to these baselines, to measure program performance throughout the business reporting cycle 3.3. Progressively review project baselines to ensure nominated benefits are consistent with organisational expectations 3.4. Direct finalisation plans, procedures and activities to ensure final outcomes are met and that projects meet agreed program objectives 3.5. Review projects finalised in a program management reporting period to evaluate benefits to the business 3.6. Pass on integration management lessons learned to higher project authority and provide feedback for application to other projects

BSBPMG603A Direct time management of a project program

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to direct time management across projects so that key deliverables meet project and program schedules. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	A program is defined as a set of interrelated projects, each of which has a project manager. Multiple projects (sometimes called a portfolio of projects) refers to a number of projects related in some way and managed by the same person as a program to achieve a common organisational objective/s. For the purposes of this unit someone who manages a suite of projects (a program) will be referred to as a program manager. The functions performed by a project manager to manage time and scheduling within individual projects are addressed in BSBPMG503A Manage project time.

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Direct project schedule development	1.1. Determine from individual project plans the duration, effort, sequence and interdependencies of major activities and milestones to form the basis of the program schedule 1.2. Direct project managers by the use of time management methods, techniques and tools, preferred schedules, time management plans, resource allocation and financial requirements to enable continuous updating and refining of the program schedule 1.3. Formalise and communicate project schedules, with agreement, to stakeholders as the basis for planning, implementation and review of progress
2. Manage program schedules	2.1. Develop, implement and modify mechanisms to monitor, control, record and report actual progress in relation to the agreed schedule and plans

	2.2. Conduct ongoing analysis to identify and forecast variances and trends, and to develop responses so that projects meet their schedules 2.3. Manage durations of key activities and interdependencies between projects to enable financial and resource rationalisation across the program, to meet strategic expectations within the management/reporting period of the program 2.4. Review progress and refine the schedule throughout the program life cycle to ensure consistency with changing scope, objectives and constraints related to time and resource availability 2.5. Ensure responses to perceived, potential or actual project schedule changes are authorised to achieve program objectives
3. Analyse time management outcomes	3.1. Review and analyse multiple project and program outcomes from available records and information to determine the effectiveness of the schedule and time management processes 3.2. Pass on lessons learned to higher project authority and provide feedback for application, planning and implementation of later projects within the program

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.
Required skills
• high level leadership skills to inspire trust and confidence in all stakeholder groups • literacy skills to communicate decisions and to write quality reports • communication and interpersonal skills to convey expectations, negotiate, resolve conflict and motivate performance • planning and organising skills to ensure that time lines are met across projects • time management skills (of self and others) • problem-solving skills to address time management issues.
Required knowledge
• relationship between time, cost and resources to the project management framework

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
• time management and estimating • methodologies, techniques and tools, their capabilities, limitations, applicability and outcomes.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • demonstrated experience in directing project work so that timelines are met across a range of concurrent projects • knowledge of the relationship between time, cost and resources to the project management framework.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to workplace documentation • consideration of feedback from project team and stakeholders as to how time was managed.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance of program time management by the candidate • analysis of responses addressing different project time management case studies and scenarios • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of strategies for managing project time and their application to different situations • review of how project schedules were formalised and communicated • evaluation of ongoing analysis to identify and forecast variances and trends

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• review of progress and refinement of the schedule throughout the program life cycle.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other units from the Advanced Diploma of Project Management.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.
Time management may:	• be conducted non-routinely to meet complex, changing circumstances • be done by taking the lead in a team environment • involve consultation with project managers and selective involvement of stakeholders • involve the direction of the use of appropriate time management methods, processes, procedures, tools and techniques • take into account the impact of organisational and environmental change on the program's projects and vice versa
Techniques and tools may include:	• assessing and reporting the potential impact of multiple project timings and their potential for change on the program, and therefore the organisation • collating and using the products of specialist time analysis to make program-wide time management decisions • directing qualitative and/or quantitative time analysis, such as schedule simulation, decision analysis, contingency planning and alternative strategy development

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

RANGE STATEMENT
	• using personal experience and/or subject matter experts
Time management plans may include:	• alternative schedule management strategies and actions • assigned schedule management responsibilities • contingency plans • formal arrangements • important milestones and critical interdependencies between projects • program consolidated schedule • responsibility assignment • sub-schedules
Records may take the form of:	• diaries, incident logs, occurrence reports and other such documentation • gantt, PERT and other scheduling charts • lists of variances, trends and forecasts of potential schedule events • program and/or organisation files and records • records of analysis, evaluation of options and selection processes • records of responses, results and lessons learned

• planning skills to identify project and program information requirements • literacy skills to communicate decisions and to write quality reports • problem-solving skills to address communication management problems • interpersonal skills to communicate with customers and to manage customer relationships and networks • analytical skills to review and analyse project outcomes.
Required knowledge
• PMIS structures and options • information validation processes and their application to various contexts • new technologies for communications and their relative strengths and weaknesses.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • demonstrated experience in directing communications and information across a range of concurrent projects • knowledge of PMIS structures and options.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to examples of relevant workplace documentation (including electronic media) • consideration of feedback from project teams and stakeholders as to how communications were managed.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skill and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance of scope management techniques by the candidate

BSBPMG608A Direct risk management of a project program

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage factors that might adversely affect the project program and organisational outcomes. It covers directing the planning and management of project risks, managing risks to the overall program and assessing risk management outcomes for the program and the organisation. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	A program is defined as a set of interrelated projects, each of which has a project manager. Multiple projects (sometimes called a portfolio of projects) refers to a number of projects related in some way and managed by the same person as a program to achieve a common organisational objective/s. For the purposes of this unit someone who manages a suite of projects (a program) will be referred to as a program manager. The functions performed by a project manager to manage risk within individual projects are addressed in BSBPMG508A Manage project risk.

BSBREL701A Develop and cultivate collaborative partnerships and relationships

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to establish collaborative partnerships and relationships with business and industry stakeholders to promote and advance learning programs. The unit also covers communicating to influence others, cultivating new and existing partnerships, establishing positive collaborative relationships, leading the establishment of a partnership program and establishing reporting mechanisms. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to leaders or managers working in either an educational organisation or a non educational enterprise where learning is used to build capabilities. It includes forming partnerships or other collaborative arrangements to achieve improved learner, community, career, or work outcomes. Educational leaders gain the respect of colleagues, contacts, clients and the community through demonstrating professionalism in all aspects of their work; this professionalism is underpinned by their educational expertise and effective interpersonal and communication skills. In the vocational education and training sector, learning leaders and managers must build partnerships and lead in a collaborative manner to ensure learning has a strategic role in the ever changing context, and in the face of complex influences that affect learning.

Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential:
	• formulating a research proposal or plan which includes:
	  • specific research questions or hypotheses
	  • valid population or sample size
	  • description of the geographical, cultural, social or institutional context within which the research will be carried out
	  • full description of the data collection methods
	  • analysis of the limitations to research design
	• designing an applied research project using appropriate tools and techniques
	• research report with analysis of data, and valid and reliable findings
	• utility and relevance of the research results
	• knowledge of applied research techniques.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • research activity relates to an actual workplace or simulated context and topic • competence is consistently demonstrated over time, over a range of applied topics, and using a range of tools and techniques appropriate to the given situations and research topic.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • applied projects or assessment activities relating to conducting applied research • observation of contextual application of skills • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of applied research.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended,

	• occupational health and safety • predetermined service user group • skill or competency profile • socioeconomic background
Applied research strategy may cover:	• analysis of industry specific trends, statistics and issues • collection of data to assist informed decision making, planning or risk management • data and information relating to strategy, policy, practices, or work processes developed and implemented by an organisation • formation of solutions to complex problems • information and analysis needed to develop a campaign, strategic plan, industry or sector plan and strategy, or to bargain effectively with employers • information and analysis to conduct a strategic or community campaign or activity • relationship or relevance of a theory, principle or practice to an immediate practical problem, issue or to test a proposed solution
Factors affecting reliability and validity may include:	• sample size • type or survey used (e.g. comparing types and methods to increase validity) • capacity to generalise findings across the whole population • access appropriate population
Hypothesis is:	• conceptual or operational proposition or explanation that will be tested through the conduct of the applied research
Tools may be:	• designed for electronic or physical presentation • involve a range of technologies (online or computer-based)
Resources may include:	• components required • design specifications • infrastructure • monetary • physical • technical manuals • samples
Applied research methods and	• methods such as:

	appropriate processes for capture and classification • identifying activities documented by records • applying classifications schemes • recording metadata accurately.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to examples records, recordkeeping systems and policies • access to workplace reference materials such as procedural manuals and company policies.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of authenticated documents from the workplace or training environment • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of general principles and processes of recordkeeping systems.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • administration units • other knowledge management units.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • complying with organisational procedures and workplace requirements • knowledge and understanding of business or records systems • accurately recording information.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to an actual workplace or simulated work environment • access to office equipment and resources • access to examples of records, recordkeeping systems and policies • access to workplace reference materials such as procedural manuals and company policies.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of authenticated documents from the workplace or training environment • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of

BSBRKG305A Review recordkeeping functions

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to undertake research that supports work across a wide range of recordkeeping functions. This is a foundation unit for any person wishing to pursue competency in recordkeeping and provides a sound basis for working across various recordkeeping functional areas. This unit is based on the joint Australian Society of Archivists (ASA) and Records Management Association of Australasia's (RMAA) Statement of Knowledge for Recordkeeping Professionals. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals requiring some understanding of relevant theoretical knowledge relating to recordkeeping functions. It is not assumed that individuals at this level would have responsibility for supervising the work of others; however it is assumed that as a recordkeeping practitioner their work will support effective recordkeeping and governance practices across the organisation.

BSBRKG403C Set up a business or records system for a small business

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This version first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 6.0. Revised unit. Required knowledge and Range Statement changed to include environmentally sustainable practices. Replaces BSBRKG403B Set up a business or records system for a small business

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to research, develop and implement business or records systems for a small office.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals who are required to demonstrate understanding of a broad knowledge base incorporating some theoretical recordkeeping concepts. The application is in relation to individuals working in a range of 'small' office environments where, in most cases, recordkeeping is only part of the individual's responsibilities; the unit addresses the less formal recordkeeping requirements of micro or small businesses or branches and technical operations centres of larger organisations.

Typically, the individual would report to a supervisor or manager within the organisation and be solely responsible for the development and implementation of business or records systems, including training users of the system.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to explain and clarify procedures, and to consult with users of a records or business system
- literacy skills to read and interpret record content, functions and problems
- problem-solving and analysis skills to identify requirements of business or records system.

Required knowledge

- key provisions of relevant legislation from all forms of government, regulations, standards and documentation that may affect aspects of business operations, such as:
  - AS 5044.1:2002 AGLS Metadata element set
  - AS 5090:2003 Work process analysis for recordkeeping
  - AS ISO 15489:2004 Records management
  - AS ISO 23081.1:2006 Information and documentation – Records management processes – Metadata for records – Principles
  - Australian Stock Exchange (ASX) Principles of Good Corporate Governance
  - ethical principles
  - codes of practice
  - privacy and freedom of information
  - archives and records legislation
  - occupational health and safety
  - environmental sustainability practices in business operations

- general principles and processes of records management and records management systems, such as:
  - systems of control
  - records continuum theory
  - mandate and ownership of business process
  - environmental context
  - records characteristics
- internal controls
- organisational functions, structure and culture
- organisational policies and strategies
- organisational technological base.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • translating business functions and reporting requirements into a brief that describes the requirements of a business or records system • developing a business or records system, including rules and procedures • knowledge of organisational functions, structure and culture.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to examples of records, recordkeeping systems and policies • access to workplace reference materials such as procedural manuals and company policies.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• review of documentation outlining procedures developed for the use of the system • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of general principles and processes of recordkeeping systems.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • administration units • other knowledge management units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Documenting core business may involve identifying:	• authenticity, integrity, reliability and useability of records or other documents • diagrammatic representations • formal documents • hand written documents • informal communications • online instructions or computer-based format instructions that can be updated • paper-based manuals • other text.
Resources may include:	• human resources and their availability • location of resources currently in operation • physical resources • organisational policies and procedures • technological resources • those available for purchase or development.
Business and social context may include:	• clients or customers and their expectations • codes of ethics and codes of professional conduct specific to industry sector • community expectations • governance frameworks

Organisational functions and activities that may be documented may include:	• asset management • conventional and email correspondence • customer relationship management • human resources management • invoicing and sales • legislative, regulatory and licensing compliance • marketing and promotion • purchasing and expenditure • research and development • risk management • stock control.

Records may include:	• different stages of use:
	  • active
	  • archival
	• digital:
	  • remote drives
	  • servers
	  • CDs
	  • DVDs
	  • imaging systems
	  • PC-based applications

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to document or reconstruct a business or records system and its context over time. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals who are required to demonstrate understanding of a broad knowledge base, incorporating theoretical concepts with substantial depth in some areas. The application is in relation to those who work closely with other members of an organisation and have individual responsibility for documenting or reconstructing systems, and to those who work in specialist recordkeeping environments, such as archives. The unit can be applied equally to all types of collections of records, although historically it has been understood to relate only to traditional archival work. A business or records system may need to be reconstructed for a variety of reasons, including: • capturing into archival control systems for access and control purposes • changes to the system of control including computerisation or migration between systems • transfer of an organisation's ownership or control arising from amalgamation, takeover or bankruptcy • administrative change, closure of offices or changes in accommodation.

Required knowledge

• construction and use of language in the organisation in relation to recordkeeping (past and present)
• key provisions of relevant legislation from all forms of government, regulations, standards and documentation that may affect aspects of business operations, such as:
  • AS 5044.1:2002 AGLS Metadata element set
  • AS 5090:2003 Work process analysis for recordkeeping
  • AS ISO 15489:2004 Records management
  • AS ISO 23081.1:2006 Information and documentation - Records management processes - Metadata for records - Principles
  • Australian Stock Exchange(ASX) Principles of Good Corporate Governance
  • ethical principles
  • codes of practice
  • privacy and freedom of information
  • archives and records legislation
  • occupational health and safety
• general principles and processes of records management and records management systems, such as:
  • systems of control
  • records continuum theory
  • mandate and ownership of business process
• organisational business functions, structure and culture
• organisational policies, strategies and procedures, particularly those relating to records access and security.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • interpreting the concepts of records series and records systems

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• applying the concepts of records systems and series to an analysis of information about records in relation to organisational activities • knowledge of different systems for creating and managing records in the reconstruction of records systems.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to an actual workplace or simulated environment • access to office equipment and resources • access to examples of records, recordkeeping system and policies • access to workplace reference materials such as procedural manuals and company policy.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of documentation outlining elements of the business or records system • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of general principles and processes of recordkeeping systems.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other business services units • other knowledge management units.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to develop new or modified vocabulary controls and classification schemes for business or records systems based on an organisation's functions and activities. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals who are required to demonstrate understanding of a broad knowledge base, incorporating theoretical concepts with substantial depth in some areas. The application is in relation to those who work closely with other staff members throughout an organisation, and who may also have individual responsibility for the development and implementation of systems, or may be working in a specialist recordkeeping environment such as archives. Generally, where no formal vocabulary controls exist in an organisation there is a form of controlled titling. This unit covers the formalisation of such informal schemes. Vocabulary control, or controlled language, is commonly called a 'thesaurus' in some sectors of the recordkeeping industry. Where a new system of vocabulary controls is put in place, or amendments to current controls are introduced, many organisations may choose to implement training or development programs to assist users with implementation.

BSBRKG601B Define recordkeeping framework

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to define, identify and establish the recordkeeping framework for an organisation or business unit at functional level. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals with understanding and specialist knowledge, with depth in some areas of business or records systems. The application is in relation to senior staff in a specialist recordkeeping environment with responsibility for a team, though the unit may also apply to individuals with sole responsibility for recordkeeping systems within larger enterprises. The development of a recordkeeping framework enables employees to create records that will adequately document the business activities in which they take part. It will also ensure that the information and processing systems which support business activities create appropriate records as part of their role in supporting those activities. The recordkeeping framework includes regulatory requirements, areas of risk, evidence to be captured as records, and responsibilities for recordkeeping to develop business systems.

Required Skills and Knowledge

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication and negotiation skills to explain complex relationships and processes effectively to users and management, and to consult with relevant stakeholders
- information management skills to analyse and synthesise documentation, verbally delivered information, and observed behaviours
- information management skills to identify recordkeeping specifications to implement access control and records of use
- information management skills to use judgement and discretion with sensitive and confidential information
- leadership skills to create and implement achievable recordkeeping mechanisms and practices for others to follow
- literacy skills to prepare, compile, and write complex documents and reports, and to document complex relationships and processes
- problem-solving skills to solve recordkeeping problems
- technology skills to use equipment relevant to conducting recordkeeping activities.

Required knowledge

- key provisions of relevant legislation from all forms of government, regulations, standards and documentation that may affect aspects of business operations, such as:
  - AS 5044.1:2002 AGLS Metadata element set
  - AS 5090:2003 Work process analysis for recordkeeping
  - AS ISO 15489:2004 Records management
  - AS ISO 23081.1:2006 Information and documentation - Records management processes - Metadata for records - Principles
  - AS/NZS 4360:2004 Risk management
  - Australian Stock Exchange(ASX) Principles of Good Corporate Governance
  - ethical principles
  - codes of practice
  - archives and records legislation
  - privacy and freedom of information
  - occupational health and safety (OHS)
- general principles and processes of records management and records management systems, such as:
  - systems of control
  - records continuum theory

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
• mandate and ownership of business process • organisational business functions, structure and culture • organisational policies, strategies and procedures, particularly those relating to sensitive information • principles and practices of diversity and cross-cultural communication.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • documenting usage and conducting a risk analysis of policies and procedures for implementing security and access rules • reporting on a recordkeeping access strategy, classifications and rules • documenting policies and procedures for recordkeeping in an organisation including access permissions, restrictions, and control mechanisms • reporting on success of implementation and amendments made in response to monitoring the implementation of the recordkeeping system • knowledge of organisational policies, strategies and procedures, particularly those relating to sensitive information.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to an actual workplace or simulated environment • access to examples of records, recordkeeping system and policies • access to office equipment and resources.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• assessment of written reports on the risk management plans, plans, strategies and monitoring reports • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of presentations of reports on the recordkeeping requirements, strategies, policies and procedures • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge and understanding • review of authenticated documents from the workplace or training environment • review of testimony from team members, colleagues, supervisors or managers.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • administration units • other knowledge management units.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.
Legal and regulatory framework may include:	• anti-discrimination legislation • AS 1203:1996 Microfilming of engineering documents • AS 2840:1986 Microfilming newspapers for archival purposes • AS 3674:1989 Storage of microfilm • AS 4003:1996 Permanent paper • AS ISO 15489:2004 Records management • award and enterprise agreements and relevant industrial instruments

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to determine the structure, content and context of records to document a business function. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals with understanding and specialist knowledge, with depth in some areas of business or records systems. The application is in relation to individuals with specialist knowledge in business or records systems. These people will generally be senior staff in a specialist recordkeeping environment with responsibility for a team, though they may also be individuals with sole responsibility for recordkeeping systems within larger enterprises. Note that the record requirements for a given function tend to have a longer life span than any system developed to manage its records; this is particularly the case with computerised systems in which specifications tend to change with each cycle of software upgrade.

Application of the unit	This unit applies to individuals with understanding and specialist knowledge, with depth in some areas of business or records systems. The application is in relation to individuals who require specialist knowledge in business or records systems. These people will generally be senior staff in a specialist recordkeeping environment with responsibility for a team, though they may also be individuals with sole responsibility for recordkeeping systems within larger enterprises. The unit can be applied equally to all types of collections of records, although historically it has been understood to relate only to traditional archival work.

Release 1	Initial release of this Unit.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to present sales solutions that respond to the specific buying needs of a client, and to use sales processes associated with securing prospect commitment to proceed with a sale. The unit also includes attending to post-sales activities that build and strengthen the partnership between a salesperson and the client, and enhance the prospect of future sales.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals working in a sales-related position in a small, medium or large enterprise in a wide variety of industries who use specific sales techniques to present a sales solution to meet buyer needs, secure a prospect's commitment to purchase a product or service, and build post-sale and long-term relationships to establish an ongoing relationship with clients. They may provide sales solutions individually, or provide advice and support about aspects of sales solutions to support a sales team.

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • completeness in terms of scope and detail of analysis of the implications of family, cultural and community obligations/commitments on self, staff and the business • clarification of a culturally appropriate work ethic and the workability of plans and strategies for maintaining this ethic • plans and strategies to address the negative impact obligations/commitments may have on the business • knowledge of characteristics of small business and its environment.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to relevant documentation • candidate's individual circumstances and work in the context of running a small business, are the basis for assessment.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • portfolio of evidence including the analysis of the implications of obligations/commitments and plans/strategies to address any negative impacts these may have on the business • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of community and family expectations and dynamics • analysis of review of plans and strategies.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBSMB409A Build and maintain relationships with small business stakeholders.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to effectively analyse the workplace in relation to environmentally sustainable work practices and to implement improvements and monitor their effectiveness.

This unit requires the ability to access industry information, applicable legislative and occupational health and safety (OHS) guidelines.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit applies to those with responsibility for a specific area of work or who lead a work group or team. It addresses the knowledge, processes and techniques necessary to implement and monitor environmentally sustainable work practices, including the development of processes and tools, such as: • identifying areas for improvement • developing plans to make improvements • implementing and monitoring improvements in environmental performance. A person who demonstrates competence in this unit must be able to provide evidence of the ability to implement and monitor integrated environmental and resource efficiency management policies and procedures within an organisation. Evidence must be strictly relevant to the

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to analyse problems, to devise solutions and to reflect on approaches taken
- change management skills
- communication skills to answer questions, clarify and acknowledge suggestions relating to work requirements and efficiency
- communication/consultation skills to support information flow from stakeholders to the work group
- innovation skills to identify improvements, to apply knowledge about resource use to organisational activities and to develop tools
- literacy skills to comprehend documentation, to interpret environmental and energy efficiency requirements, to create tools to measure and monitor improvements and to report outcomes
- numeracy skills to analyse data on organisational resource consumption and waste product volumes
- planning and organising skills to implement environmental and energy efficiency management polices and procedures relevant to own work area
- problem-solving skills to devise approaches to improved environmental sustainability and to develop alternative approaches as required
- technology skills to operate and shut down equipment; where relevant, to use software systems for recording and filing documentation to measure current usage; and to use word processing and other basic software for interpreting charts, flowcharts, graphs and other visual data and information
- supervisory skills to work effectively with a team.

Required knowledge

- best practice approaches relevant to own area of responsibility and industry
- compliance requirements within work area for all relevant environmental/sustainability legislation, regulations and codes of practice including resource hazards/risks associated with work area, job specifications and procedures
- environmental and energy efficiency issues, systems and procedures specific to industry practice
- external benchmarks and support for particular benchmarks to be used within organisation, including approaches to improving resource use for work area and expected outcomes

- OHS issues and requirements
- organisational structure and reporting channels and procedures
- quality assurance systems relevant to own work area
- strategies to maximise opportunities and to minimise impact relevant to own work area
- supply chain procedures
- terms and conditions of employment including policies and procedures, such as daily tasks, work area responsibilities, employee, supervisor and employer rights, equal opportunity.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • knowledge of relevant compliance requirements within work area • developing plans to make improvements • planning and organising work group activities in relation to measuring current use and devising strategies to improve usage • monitoring resource use and improvements for environmental performance relative to work area and supervision • ensuring appropriate action is taken within work area in relation to environmental/sustainability compliance and potential hazards • implementing new approaches to work area in an effort to resolve and improve environmental and resource efficiency issues and reporting as required.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to an actual workplace or simulated environment • access to a range of environment/sustainability legislation, standards, guidelines and procedural requirements relevant to specific work area, daily

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Compliance may include:	• meeting relevant laws, by-laws and regulations or best practice or codes of practice to support compliance in environmental performance and sustainability at each level as required (such as Environmental Protection or Biodiversity Conservation Act):
	  • international
	  • commonwealth
	  • state/territory
	  • industry
	  • organisation.

Sources may include:	• organisation specifications • regulatory sources • relevant stakeholders • resource use.
Purchasing strategies may include:	• influencing suppliers to take up environmental sustainability approaches • researching and participating in programs such as a supply chain program to purchase sustainable products.

Stakeholders, key personnel and specialists may include:	• individuals and groups both inside and outside the organisation who have direct or indirect interest in the organisation's conduct, actions, products and services, including:
	  • customers
	  • employees at all levels of the organisation
	  • government

	• investors • local community • other organisations • suppliers • key personnel within the organisation, and specialists outside the organisation who may have particular technical expertise.
Techniques and tools may include:	• examination of invoices from suppliers • examination of relevant information and data • measurements made under different conditions • others as appropriate to the specific industry context.

Environmental and resource efficiency improvement plans may include:	• addressing environmental and resource sustainability initiatives such as environmental management systems, action plans, green office programs, surveys and audits
	• applying the waste management hierarchy in the workplace
	• determining organisation's most appropriate waste treatment including waste to landfill, recycling, re-use, recoverable resources and wastewater treatment
	• initiating and/or maintaining appropriate organisational procedures for operational energy consumption, including stationary energy and non-stationary (transport)
	• preventing and minimising risks, and maximising opportunities such as:
	  • improving resource/energy efficiency
	  • reducing emissions of greenhouse gases
	• reducing use of non-renewable resources
	• referencing standards, guidelines and approaches such as:
	  • ecological footprinting
	  • Energy Efficiency Opportunities Bill 2005
	  • Global Reporting Initiative
	  • green office program – a cultural change program

	• product stewardship • supply chain management • sustainability covenants/compacts • triple bottom line reporting.

Suggestions may include ideas that help to:	• prevent and minimise risks and maximise opportunities such as:
	  • usage of solar or renewable energies where appropriate
	  • reducing emissions of greenhouse gases
	  • reducing use of non-renewable resources
	  • making more efficient use of resources, energy and water
	• maximising opportunities to re-use, recycle and reclaim materials
	• identifying strategies to offset or mitigate environmental impacts:
	  • purchasing carbon credits
	  • energy conservation
	  • reducing chemical use
	  • reducing material consumption
	• expressing purchasing power through the selection of suppliers with improved environmental performance e.g. purchasing renewable energy
	• eliminating the use of hazardous and toxic materials.

Environmental assets may include:	• assets of the natural environment such as:
	  • biological assets (produced or natural)
	  • land
	  • water areas with their ecosystems

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to develop and implement a workplace sustainability policy, including the modification of the policy to suit changed circumstances. This unit requires the ability to access industry information, applicable legislative and occupational health and safety (OHS) guidelines. While no licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply holistically to this unit at the time of publication, relevant national, state and territory legislation, regulations and codes of practice impact upon this unit.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit addresses the knowledge, processes and techniques necessary to develop approaches to sustainability within workplaces, including the development and implementation of policy. This unit applies to people with managerial responsibility who undertake work developing approaches to create strategies within workplaces, including the development and implementation of policy and includes: • communicating with relevant stakeholders • developing and monitoring policies • reviewing and improving policies. A person who demonstrates competence in this unit must be able to provide evidence of the ability to develop and implement integrated sustainability policies and

Required Skills and Knowledge

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.
Required skills
• communication skills to adjust communication to suit different audiences; to respond effectively to diversity; to work as a member of a team to consult on and validate policy • literacy skills to read and evaluate complex and formal documents such as policy and legislation • problem skills to effectively manage different points of view and dissenting stakeholders • research, analytical and writing skills to research, analyse and present information; to prepare written reports requiring precision of expression and language and structures suited to the intended audience
Required knowledge
• best practice approaches relevant to own work area • environmental or sustainability legislation, regulations and codes of practice applicable to industry and organisation • equal employment opportunity, equity and diversity principles and occupational health and safety implications of policy being developed • policy development processes and practices • principles, practices and available tools and techniques of sustainability management relevant to the particular industry context • quality assurance systems relevant to own organisation • relevant industry competency • relevant organisational polices, procedures and protocols • relevant systems and procedures to aid in the achievement of workplace sustainability

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment

EVIDENCE GUIDE
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • candidate's involvement as a key person in planning, developing and implementing organisational policy and that the developed policy complies with legislative requirements • implementation strategy, as part of the policy, that has been devised, implemented and reviewed showing a measurable improvement utilising the chosen benchmark indicators • communicating with stakeholders to discuss possible approaches to policy development and implementation, and contributing to the resolution of disputes among stakeholders • developing and monitoring policies for analysing data on enterprise resource consumption • using software systems for recording and filing documentation for measurement of current usage and using word processing and other basic software for interpreting charts, flowcharts, graphs and other visual data and information • reviewing and improving policies by identifying improvements and benchmarking against industry best practice and attempting new approaches continuously over time.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to an actual workplace or simulated environment • access to relevant legislation/standards/guidelines • access to a range of workplace documentation and personnel, information and resources (such as compliance obligations, organisational plans, work responsibilities) • access to reports from other parties involved in the development and implementation of policy • evidence is collected over time, involving both formative and summative assessment • evidence is relevant to the particular workplace role, including work area, equipment, systems, and documentation.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third party workplace reports of on the job performance by the candidate • response to case studies • review of policy developed and procedural documentation outlining the approach taken • review of implementation strategy, plans and work plans • analysis of methods used to involve stakeholders in policy development, implementation and review • analysis of inefficiencies or opportunities for improvements identified in the workplace • evaluation of participation in sustainability work practices and programs such as an environmental management framework • observation over time in relation to review of work area relating to policy and procedures being developed to assess measurement of resources used, hazards and compliance.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBATSIM419A Contribute to the development and implementation of organisational policies • BSBHRM506A Manage recruitment, selection and induction processes • BSBHRM602B Manage human resources strategic planning • BSBINN502A Build and sustain an innovative work environment • BSBMGT515A Manage operational plan • BSBMGT516C Facilitate continuous improvement • BSBMGT608C Manage innovation and continuous improvement • BSBMGT616A Develop and implement strategic plans • BSBMGT617A Develop and implement a business plan • BSBRSK501A Manage risk.

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS201A Participate in OHS processes.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to participate in work health and safety (WHS) processes to protect own health and safety, and that of others.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals who require a fundamental knowledge of WHS to carry out their own work, which may be in a defined context under direct supervision or with some individual responsibility. The unit has broad applicability across industries and workplace contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBCMN311B Maintain workplace safety.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to implement and monitor the organisation's work health and safety (WHS) policies, procedures and programs as part of a small work team.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to workers who have a key role in maintaining workplace safety in an organisation. In their role they closely monitor aspects of work associated with the safe delivery of products and services, and they have an important responsibility in influencing ongoing safety in the workplace.

At this level, work will normally be carried out within known routines, methods and procedures but may also involve a number of complex or non-routine activities that require some discretion and judgement.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

4. Participate in identifying hazards, and assessing and controlling risks for the work area	4.1 Provide advice on hazards in the work area according to organisational policies and procedures, and WHS legal requirements 4.2 Support the implementation of procedures to control risks using the hierarchy of control and according to organisational procedures and WHS legal requirements 4.3 Identify and report inadequacies in existing risk control measures according to organisational procedures, the hierarchy of control and WHS legal requirements 4.4 Accurately complete and maintain WHS incident records in the work area according to organisational procedures and WHS legislative requirements

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - assess resources required to apply risk controls
  - assist with environmental monitoring
  - identify hazards and assess risks appropriate to own work area and job role
  - monitor incidents and hazards
  - evaluate effectiveness of risk controls
- coaching and mentoring skills to provide support to colleagues
- communication skills to communicate with people from a range of backgrounds and with a range of abilities
- literacy skills to understand workplace procedures and work instructions for identifying and reporting hazards, and for interpreting WHS signs and symbols.

Required knowledge

- characteristics and composition of the work team
- hazards and associated risks in the workplace
- organisational policies and procedures relating to WHS, including hazard management, fire, emergencies, evacuation, incident investigation and reporting
- relevant Acts, regulations and codes of practice from all levels of government that impact on business operations, especially with regard to WHS and environmental issues, equal opportunity, industrial relations and anti-discrimination
- WHS aspects of other organisational systems and procedures.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • implementing organisational management systems and WHS procedures in own work area • understanding of and meeting WHS legal and organisational requirements as they apply to own work area and job role • knowledge of procedures for identifying hazards in the work area • knowledge of procedures for assessing and controlling risks to health and safety associated with those hazards according to organisational WHS procedures.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to:
	• safety processes relevant to the area of work
	• relevant information and documentation on compliance requirements, such as:
	  • organisational policies and procedures, standard operating procedures and plans
	  • relevant Acts, regulations, codes of practice, licensing requirements and standards
	• relevant internal and external information

	the identification and rectification of WHS compliance breaches.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of documents on WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards, policies and procedures developed and communicated to workers • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of applying WHS legislation • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of research and data-collection methods to obtain evidence of compliance with WHS legislation • assessment of duty of care arrangements.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS legislation may include:	• WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice
	• components of Acts and regulations, such as:
	  • dangerous goods
	  • environmental protection
	  • equal opportunity and anti-discrimination
	  • industrial relations
	  • privacy
	  • workers' compensation.

WHS policies, procedures, programs and legislative requirements may include:	• consultative arrangements for workers in the work area • emergency plan and procedures • first aid provision, and medical practitioner contact and attention • hazard reporting procedures • incident investigation • plant and equipment maintenance and use • procedures for hazard identification • procedures for risk assessment, and the selection and implementation of risk control measures • purchasing policy and procedures • safe operating procedures and instructions • site access and egress • transport and storage of dangerous goods • use and care of personal protective equipment • use and storage of hazardous substances • WHS arrangements for on-site contractors, visitors and members of the public • WHS audits and safety inspections.
Individuals and parties may include:	• contractors and subcontractors • customers • persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers • workers • other persons at a workplace • WHS entry permit holders • WHS inspectors • WHS regulators.

Methods for identifying hazards and risk assessment include:	• as specified in WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice
	• checking equipment before and during work
	• consulting work team members
	• housekeeping
	• reviewing records, for example:
	  • equipment maintenance
	  • hazardous chemicals, including labels and safety data sheet (SDS) register, and dangerous goods storage list
	  • injury
	  • training plan
	• workplace inspections in area of responsibility.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Organisational consultative procedures may include:	• attendance of health and safety representatives at management meetings • counselling and disciplinary processes • early response to worker suggestions, requests, reports and concerns put forward to management • formal and informal meetings • health and safety committees • other committees, for example planning and purchasing.
WHS training needs may include:	• coaching, mentoring and/or supervision • formal and informal learning programs • internal and external training programs • personal study.
Coaching and mentoring assistance may include:	• explaining and clarifying • presenting and promoting a safe workplace • problem solving • providing encouragement • providing feedback to another team member • respecting the contribution of all participants and giving credit for achievements.

Hazards in the work area may include:	• anything that has the potential to cause harm
	• as specified in WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice
	• blocked exits
	• ergonomically unsuitable workstations and task design, for example:
	  • repetitive work
	  • poor lighting or glary surfaces
	  • non-adjustable work surfaces and seating
	• internal or external threat of occupational violence or bullying
	• lack of adequate storage
	• reliance on low order control measure (such as personal protective equipment) to reduce worker risk exposure, instead of controlling the hazard itself
	• slippery and uneven floors
	• unguarded and poorly maintained machinery and equipment
	• unlabelled chemicals and substances
	• untidy or noisy work areas.

Procedures to control risks may	• as specified in WHS Acts, regulations and codes of

- help workplace parties to obtain information about hazards.

Required knowledge

- basic principles of incident causation and injury processes
- concept of hazards, risks and risk factors
- hazard identification and risk assessment methods
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- organisational design and structure
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- range of WHS hazards that may be present in the workplace, the harm they can cause and how this harm occurs
- relevant commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material, and other relevant publications
- risk control options for different hazards and work situations
- risk control requirements as specified in WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material, other relevant publications, workplace conditions and organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- types of hazard and risk registers
- WHS legislative requirements about:
  - communication, consultation and participation
  - notification of incidents
  - recordkeeping
  - specific hazard identification and risk assessment methods
- workplace communication processes.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • collection of information about workplace hazards and participation in the identification of hazards in a workplace • using hazard identification methods appropriately • participating in risk assessments for hazards

	identified in the workplace • participating in developing, selecting and implementing risk controls in a workplace • knowledge of relevant commonwealth and state or territory Acts, regulations, codes of practice standards and guidance material.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to:
	• relevant information on WHS compliance requirements, such as:
	  • organisational policies, standard operating procedures and plans
	  • relevant Acts, regulations, codes of practice, licensing requirements and standards
	• relevant internal and external data files
	• appropriate computer resources needed to manage the identification and rectification of breaches in compliance requirements.

Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of applying hazard identification, risk assessment and risk control techniques in the workplace • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of consequences and likelihood of risks associated with hazards in the workplace • review of research into WHS hazards and their associated risks • review of information provided to individuals and parties about selected risk controls • assessment of documentation completed when identifying hazards, assessing risks and developing risk control options.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example:

	• other BSB07 WHS units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Persons conducting hazard identification and risk assessments may include:	• health and safety representatives • internal or external consultants and WHS specialists • PCBUs or their officers • WHS entry permit holders • WHS inspectors • workers • workplace assessors with experience in language or disability issues.

Risk control options may include:	• actions taken to eliminate risks entirely
	• actions taken to minimise risks by:
	  • eliminating the hazard
	  • substituting the hazard with something safer
	  • isolating the hazard
	  • reducing the risk through engineering controls
	  • reducing the level of harm by improving administrative controls, such as changing policies, procedures and processes or providing training
	• using personal protective equipment (PPE), such as:
	  • clothing and footwear
	  • face and eye protection
	  • hand protection
	  • head protection
	  • hearing protection
	  • respiratory protection.

Duty holders may include:	• as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace.

Appropriate criteria may include:	• relevant sections of WHS Acts, regulations, and codes of practice • other sources of information and guidelines • workplace policies and procedures • workplace conditions.
Factors impeding may include:	• access to technology or information • cultural differences arising from ethnic diversity • geographic dispersal of workers • lack of a systematic approach to managing WHS in the workplace • lack of support from key management personnel • language, literacy and numeracy levels of the workforce • shift work and rostering arrangements • unrealistic timeframes • unsupportive workplace culture • workplace organisational structures.
Implementation and evaluation plan may include:	• how controls will be implemented and how factors impeding successful implementation will be addressed • identifying who has the responsibility for implementing the components of the plan and evaluating risk controls • timetable for implementing and evaluating risk controls.
Individuals and parties may include:	• contractors and subcontractors • external people and organisations • health and safety committees • health and safety representatives • managers and supervisors • PCBUs or their officers • self • unions • WHS entry permit holders • WHS inspectors • WHS regulators • workers.
Appropriate ways to participate	• briefings

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

may include:	• communicating with workplace parties • education and training • obtaining and communicating feedback on controls • trialling new processes and/or equipment.

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces BSBOHS407A Monitor a safe workplace.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to implement and monitor the organisation's work health and safety (WHS) policies, procedures and programs in the relevant work area in order to meet legislative requirements.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to workers with supervisory responsibilities for implementing and monitoring the organisation's WHS policies, procedures and programs in a work area.

The unit applies to individuals with a broad knowledge of WHS policies who contribute well-developed skills in creating solutions to unpredictable problems through analysis and evaluation of information from a variety of sources. These workers provide supervision and guidance to others and have limited responsibility for the output of others.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Implement and monitor organisational procedures for maintaining WHS records for the team	5.1 Accurately complete and maintain WHS records of incidents of occupational injury and disease in work area, according to WHS policies, procedures and legislative requirements 5.2 Use aggregate information and data from work area records to identify hazards and monitor risk control procedures in work area

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical and problem solving skills to:
  - identify hazards
  - assess risks in the work area

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

  - review information relating to monitoring and evaluating incidents, and the effectiveness of risk controls
- coaching and mentoring skills to provide support to colleagues
- literacy skills to understand and interpret documentation, and to interpret WHS requirements.

Required knowledge

- hazards and associated risks in the workplace
- key provisions of relevant WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice that apply to the business
- organisational policies and procedures relating to hazard management, fire, emergency, evacuation, incident investigation and reporting
- relevance of consultation and participation as key mechanisms for improving WHS and culture
- WHS legislative responsibilities, duties and obligations of managers, supervisors, persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers, and workers in the workplace.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • applying organisational WHS management systems and procedures in the work team area • applying procedures for assessing and controlling risks to health and safety associated with those hazards, according to the hierarchy of control and as specified in commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice • providing specific, clear and accurate information and advice on workplace hazards to work team • knowledge of legal responsibilities of managers, supervisors, PCBUs or their officers and workers in the workplace.
Context of and specific resources	Assessment must ensure access to:

for assessment	• an actual workplace or simulated environment • office equipment and resources • examples of documentation relating to hazards in the workplace • examples of documents relating to workplace safety, hazard identification and risk assessment.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of records communicating the outcomes of consultation over WHS issues to the work team • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • review of reports to management on the costs associated with providing training for the work team • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of workplace safety and hazards • examples of risk assessments • evaluation of actioning of team member hazard reports • review of WHS records of occupational injury and disease incidents in work area.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS408A Assist with compliance with OHS and other relevant laws.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to assist with providing advice about the legislative duties, rights and obligations of individuals and parties prescribed in work health and safety (WHS) laws.

It includes identification of WHS legislation, duties, rights and obligations and the necessary actions to ensure compliance in the workplace.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals who assist with providing advice about the legislative duties, rights and obligations of individuals and parties prescribed in WHS laws as part of a systematic approach to managing WHS. This unit applies to people who work in a broad range of WHS roles across all industries.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential:
	• currency of WHS knowledge
	• contributing to the:
	  • identification of a range of hazards
	  • assessment of risks
	  • development, implementation and evaluation of a range or combination of risk controls.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • an actual or simulated workplace • office equipment and resources • relevant legislation, standards and guidelines • relevant WHS documentation and records.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • demonstration of techniques used to identify WHS hazards and assess WHS risks • demonstration of applying WHS legislation in conducting hazard-identification and risk-management activities • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of concept of risks, factors that affect risk and difference between a hazard and a risk.

Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces but is not equivalent to BSBOHS401B Contribute to the implementation of a systematic approach to managing OHS.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to contribute to the implementation and maintenance of a work health and safety management system (WHSMS) as it applies to own work area and job role.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with responsibilities for contributing to an organisation's WHSMS as part of their work health and safety (WHS) responsibilities.

The unit applies to people who work in a broad range of WHS roles across all industries.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

BSBWHS407A Assist with claims management, rehabilitation and return-to-work programs

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to assist with the management of workers' compensation claims, rehabilitation and return-to-work programs.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals who assist with claims management, rehabilitation and return-to-work programs.

Note that the unit does not in any way address the process of treating the worker for their injury or illness as this is the task of health and rehabilitation professionals. Instead the unit focuses on assisting with managing claims and ensuring that the organisation supports the worker through return-to-work programs.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

3. Assist with collecting workplace information and data	3.1 Assist with selecting and calibrating monitoring equipment, and selecting appropriate scale 3.2 Assist with tests 3.3 Assist with correct use and maintenance of equipment to collect information and data 3.4 Ensure own health and safety while collecting information and data, and record readings using expert support and advice as appropriate 3.5 Assist with dismantling and cleaning equipment and parts, or dispose of appropriately 3.6 Assist with correctly storing equipment or making it ready for re-use as appropriate
4. Assist with documenting and evaluating results of monitoring	4.1 Assist with interpreting and evaluating results against a recognised standard and documenting results 4.2 Assist with preparing reports on the monitoring process, including any regulatory requirements, and consider purposes of report and the target audiences 4.3 Assist with presenting required information and data clearly and logically 4.4 Assist with retaining results and records in a format that enables them to be readily retrieved according to regulatory requirements and standards

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to communicate with people from a range of backgrounds and with a range of abilities
- evaluation skills to manage required WHS resources and, where appropriate, access them
- information technology skills to access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
- literacy skills to:
  - read and interpret Acts, regulations, codes of practice, policies and procedures

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

    - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
- numeracy skills to:
    - carry out calculations
    - produce graphs of workplace data to identify trends
- organisational and time-management skills to sequence tasks and meet timelines
- research and data analysis skills to:
    - analyse relevant workplace information and data
    - assess resources required to manage WHS
    - assist with evaluating interactions between workers, their activities, equipment, environment and work systems
- technical skills to:
    - use basic measuring equipment, such as scales and dials applicable to specific hazards
    - maintain equipment used for workplace monitoring.

Required knowledge

- basic physiology relevant to understanding the mode of action of physical, biological and chemical agents on the body and how they produce discomfort or harm
- characteristics, mode of action and units of measurement for major hazard types
- commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards, guidance material and links to other relevant legislation, including industrial relations, equal employment opportunity, workers' compensation, and rehabilitation
- environmental conditions that impact on measurements
- exposure standards, their limitations and their practical use
- nature of workplace processes, including work flow, planning and control; and hazards relevant to the workplace
- requirements for:
    - individual fitting, use, maintenance and storage of a range of WHS equipment
    - recordkeeping that addresses WHS, privacy and other relevant legislation
    - reporting under WHS and other relevant legislation, including obligations for notification and reporting of incidents
    - work permits and written authorities when conducting workplace monitoring activities
- types of and techniques for correct and safe use of measuring and monitoring equipment, including limitations on use and output, calibration, adjustment, maintenance and any in-built alarms
- units of measurement, logarithmic scales, decimals and order of magnitude relevant to making and interpreting measurements and measurement error.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • seeking advice and support when required • ensuring safety of self and others during monitoring process • assisting with the use of appropriate equipment to monitor selected agents and/or conditions in the workplace • knowledge of relevant Acts, regulations, codes of practice, associated standards and guidance material specific to measuring processes to identify hazards, assess risk and monitor the effectiveness of risk controls.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • a workplace or a simulated workplace with hazards requiring testing and monitoring • all measuring devices and equipment appropriate to the agent and/or condition • appropriate office and workplace equipment and resources • relevant legislation, standards and guidelines.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • explanation of techniques used to measure and monitor workplace hazards • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of techniques for correctly using safe measuring and monitoring equipment • review of documented results • review of reports on testing undertaken • evaluation of equipment operability.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS404A Contribute to WHS hazard identification, risk assessment and risk control.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Regulatory requirements and standards may include:	• Australian and international standards, such as those produced by Standards Australia and Safe Work Australia • biological exposure indices • commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice • exposure standards for atmospheric contaminants in occupational environments • guidance material, such as guidance notes, guides, fact sheets and technical reports that provide practical guidance and directions for hazard identification, risk assessment and risk controls • safety data sheets (SDS) for hazardous chemicals.
Agent and/or condition may include:	• biological agents, such as insects, mites and bacteria • electricity • fibres, dusts and particulates • fumes, mists, gases and vapours • heat and humidity • light • noise

	• radiation, including ionising, non-ionising and laser • vibration.

Individuals and parties may include:	• contractors and subcontractors
	• duty holders as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace
	• health and safety committees
	• health and safety representatives
	• suppliers
	• WHS entry permit holders
	• WHS inspectors
	• WHS regulators
	• WHS specialists, such as occupational hygienists or occupational physicians.

Characteristics may include:	• dose factors relating to concentration and time
	• how an agent affects specific parts of the body, such as:
	  • extent of damage to tissue
	  • effects, such as additive, antagonistic, synergism and potentiation
	• how an agent can affect WHS
	• how an agent is absorbed into the body
	• way an agent behaves in the environment, including over distance and time
	• work environments, such as confined spaces.

Determining the area may include:	• area or space available • location • movements of people and equipment • number of persons occupying area • other factors that may impact on the sampling or data-collection processes • physical features of equipment, such as emitting sources • tasks or activities being undertaken.
Sampling process may include:	• process, substance or hazard likely to be causing the ill-health or symptoms • size of the workforce (i.e. individual worker or work teams) • type of exposure • other practical and financial considerations.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Information and data collected may include:	• conditions, such as activities and number of people present when measurements were made
	• date, time and duration of collection
	• locations where information and data were collected
	• readouts and measurements taken
	• sampling method, for example:
	  • continuous
	  • grab
	  • longitudinal
	• specifications of equipment used.

Operability of equipment may include:	• availability of appropriate attachments, leads and filters • battery serviceability checks • check and function tests • calibration requirements • National Association of Testing Authorities (NATA) tested and certified, with certificate of currency as appropriate.
Purposes of report may include:	• as a basis for design of improved and/or new risk controls • communicating the results and ramifications of monitoring to individuals and parties • hazard identification • legal compliance • risk assessment.
Target audiences may include:	• contractors, such as hygienists, involved in sampling methodologies and procedures • designers and engineers • individuals and parties.

Required information and data may include:	• agent/condition being monitored and key issues associated with it
	• interpretation and discussion of results
	• ramifications for workers and the workplace
	• sampling process:
	  • conditions at time of sampling, including whether or not the sampling period represented normal operating conditions
	  • how measurements were taken
	  • locations where samples were taken
	  • specifications of equipment used
	• tables of results

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to communicate with people from a range of backgrounds and with a range of abilities
- problem solving and evaluation skills to assess WHS information and data
- literacy skills to prepare reports on the outcomes of evaluations of work-related health and safety measures and initiatives
- organisational and time-management skills to sequence tasks and meet timelines
- research skills to access and obtain internal and external WHS information and data.

Required knowledge

- basic understanding of application of relevant mandatory health monitoring, including biological monitoring, to help secure work health and safety
- difference between work-related health and safety measures and initiatives designed to meet specific legislative requirements and obligations, and those designed to support voluntary health promotion programs
- factors that impact on work-related health and safety and their potential effects
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them

- organisational WHS and other relevant policies, procedures, processes and systems, including human resources
- relevant exposure standards for hazardous chemicals and physical hazards, such as heat, radiation, electricity and light
- relevant WHS legislation, other legislation (such as privacy and workers' compensation) and common law rights and duties specific to work-related health and safety measures and initiatives
- work-related health and safety measures and initiatives:
  - that either meet specific legislative requirements and obligations, or support voluntary health prevention programs
  - the factors impacting on worker health and safety that they address, how effective they are, their costs and benefits, why and how they should or should not be implemented in a workplace.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • clear understanding of the difference between specific legislative requirements and obligations under WHS legislation and voluntary health-promotion programs • liaising with people internal and external to the organisation involved in work-related health and safety measures and initiatives • understanding of relevant legal issues.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • an actual or simulated workplace • relevant legislation, standards and guidelines • information and resources about factors impacting on the health and safety of workers, and work-related health and safety measures and initiatives • relevant WHS documentation and records.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS509A Ensure a safe workplace.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to establish, maintain and evaluate the organisation's work health and safety (WHS) policies, procedures and programs in the relevant work area according to WHS legislative requirements.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to managers working in a range of contexts. It takes a systems approach and addresses compliance with relevant legislative requirements.

Those who have or are likely to have responsibility for WHS as part of their broader management role should undertake this unit.

The unit is relevant for people with obligations under WHS legislation, for example persons conducting a business or undertaking (PCBUs) or their officers (as defined by relevant legislation).

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Establish and maintain a WHS management system	1.1 Locate, adapt, adopt and communicate WHS policies that clearly define the organisation's commitment to complying with WHS legislation
	1.2 Identify duty holders and define WHS responsibilities for all workplace personnel according to WHS legislation, policies, procedures and programs
	1.3 Identify and approve financial and human resources required by the WHS management system (WHSMS)
2. Establish and maintain effective and compliant participation arrangements for managing WHS	2.1 Work with workers and their representatives to set up and maintain participation arrangements according to relevant WHS legislation
	2.2 Appropriately resolve issues raised through participation and consultation arrangements according to relevant WHS legislation
	2.3 Promptly provide information about the outcomes of participation and consultation to workers and ensure it is easy for them to access and understand
3. Establish and maintain procedures for effectively identifying	3.1 Develop procedures for ongoing hazard identification, and assessment and control of associated risks

4. Evaluate and maintain a WHS management system	4.1 Develop and provide a WHS induction and training program for all workers as part of the organisation's training program 4.2 Use a system for WHS recordkeeping to allow identification of patterns of occupational injury and disease in the organisation, and to maintain a record of WHS decisions made, including reasons for the decision 4.3 Measure and evaluate the WHSMS in line with the organisation's quality systems framework 4.4 Develop and implement improvements to the WHSMS to achieve organisational WHS objectives 4.5 Ensure compliance with the WHS legislative framework so that, as a minimum, WHS legal requirements are achieved

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical and problem solving skills to examine relevant workplace information and data to identify hazards, and to assess and control risks
- communication skills to consult with staff and to promote a safe workplace
- information technology skills to store and retrieve relevant workplace information and data
- literacy skills to adapt and communicate WHS policies that reflect WHS legislative requirements
- problem-solving skills to deal with complex and non-routine difficulties.

Required knowledge

- hazard identification and risk-management processes
- hierarchy of risk control
- in-house and WHS legislative reporting requirements
- relevant WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice that apply to the business operation.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • detailed knowledge and application of all relevant WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice • establishing and maintaining arrangements for managing WHS within the organisation's business systems and practices • identifying requirements for expert WHS advice.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • appropriate documentation and resources normally used in the workplace.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • assessment of written reports • demonstration of techniques • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • review of WHS policies, information provided on the WHSMS, and information about the outcomes of participation and consultation provided to workers • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of WHS and WHS legislation • evaluation of WHS induction and training • review of WHS recordkeeping system.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS legislation may include:	• applicable commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice
	• common law duties to meet general duty of care requirements
	• WHS legislative and regulatory requirements for:
	  • effectively managing hazards
	  • establishing consultation arrangements, including those for health and safety representatives and health and safety committees
	  • providing information and training, including training in safe operating procedures; procedures for workplace hazards; hazard identification, risk assessment and risk control; and emergency and evacuation procedures
	• WHS legislative, regulatory and other requirements for the maintenance and confidentiality of records of occupational injury and disease.

Duty holders may include:	• as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • officers
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace.

Control of associated risks may include:	• administrative • as specified in WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice • counselling/disciplinary processes, such as those associated with alcohol and other drugs • education about alcohol and other drugs work-related issues • engineering • hazard elimination • housekeeping and storage • issue resolution • personal protective equipment • purchasing of supplies and equipment • workplace inspections, including plant and equipment.

WHS recordkeeping may relate to:	• audit and inspection reports
	• consultation, such as:
	  • meetings of health and safety committees
	  • work team meeting agendas, including WHS items and actions
	• first aid/medical post records
	• hazardous chemicals registers

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS503B Assist in the design and development of OHS participative arrangements.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage the identification, review, development, implementation and evaluation of effective participation and consultation processes as an integral part of managing work health and safety (WHS).

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with responsibility for identifying, reviewing, developing, implementing and evaluating processes to enable people to be consulted about, and to participate in, WHS management and decision making across their organisation. The unit also addresses influencing others from a WHS perspective and takes account of the responsibilities for managing WHS.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

  - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
  - use language and literacy skills appropriate to the work team and the task
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions
- information technology skills to use a range of software and communication media
- numeracy skills to analyse workplace information and data
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- planning skills to:
  - apply continuous improvement
  - action planning processes
- project-management skills to achieve change in WHS matters.

Required knowledge

- appropriate communication networks, processes and formats
- commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material in general, and in particular the parts relating to:
  - duties of PCBUs or their officers, workers and inspectors
  - consultation, participation and representation
  - discriminatory, coercive and misleading conduct
  - workplace entry by WHS permit holders
- formal and informal communication and consultation processes, and key personnel related to communication
- how the characteristics and composition of the workforce impact on WHS risk and the management of WHS, including:
  - communication skills
  - cultural background and diversity
  - gender
  - labour market changes
  - language, literacy and numeracy levels of the workforce
  - structure and organisation of the workforce, including part time, casual and contract workers; shift rosters; and geographical location
  - workers with specific needs and limitations
  - workplace culture towards alcohol and other drug use

- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- key personnel, including change agents, within workplace management structure
- organisational culture as it impacts on the work team
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- principles of effective meetings, including agendas, action planning, chair and secretarial duties, minutes and action items
- roles and responsibilities of individuals and parties under WHS legislation
- training needs of health and safety committees, and health and safety representatives.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • ensuring that continuous improvement is part of the ongoing review process • preparing an action plan to implement WHS participation and consultation processes • preparing positive performance indicators for evaluation.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • workplace documentation and personnel • reports from other parties consulted about design, implementation, management and review processes • relevant Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidelines.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • assessment of written reports on the effectiveness of WHS participation and consultation processes • demonstration of the provision of advice and support to individuals and parties to enable their effective involvement in consultation and participation processes • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of performance in role plays • observation of presentations • evaluation of action plans for developing consultation and participation processes • written examples of reports on assisting with the implementation of consultation and participation processes.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS506A Contribute to developing, implementing and maintaining WHS management systems • BSBWHS507A Contribute to managing WHS information systems.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS legislation may include:	• WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice

Duty holders may include:	• as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace

WHS consultation and participation processes may involve:	• workplace policies, procedures, processes, systems, activities, actions and arrangements that support and enable effective consultation on, and participation in, WHS management

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Individuals and parties may include:	• persons and groups directly or indirectly involved with participation and consultation processes and their outcomes, such as:
	  • contractors and suppliers
	  • customers
	  • health and safety committees
	  • health and safety representatives
	  • managers and supervisors
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • unions
	  • WHS inspectors
	  • WHS regulators
	  • workers
	  • workers' compensation bodies and insurers

Factors that may impact on the design include:	• cultural diversity • language, literacy and numeracy levels of the workforce • management approach • shift work and rostering arrangements • timing of information and data provision • workers with specific needs • workplace culture and approach to WHS by managers, supervisors, PCBUs or their officers, and workers • workplace organisational structure, including size of organisation, geographic location, nature of organisational hierarchy
Existing WHS systems include:	• any current policies, procedures, processes and systems to manage WHS • broadly, how WHS is managed in the organisation • formal or informal WHS management systems, including WHS information systems
Existing other systems include:	• accounting • environmental • human resources • information technology • management • quality
Evaluation protocol includes:	• criteria for evaluation • how the criteria will be measured • what and how information will be gathered

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to contribute to the systematic management of work health and safety (WHS) risk. It addresses the processes and techniques necessary to contribute to the systematic management of WHS risk.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Access information and data to contribute to the systematic management of WHS risk	1.1 Identify sources of information and data 1.2 Obtain information and data to determine the purposes, objectives, principles and framework of a systematic approach to managing WHS risk
2. Contribute to effective consultation and participation during all stages of the risk-management process	2.1 Identify individuals and parties who need to participate and be consulted 2.2 Apply knowledge of effective consultation and participation to contribute to ensuring effective consultation and participation processes occur
3. Contribute to establishing the context for risk management	3.1 Apply knowledge of WHS legislation to identify duty holders and legislative requirements for WHS risk management 3.2 Identify individuals and parties impacting on risk management 3.3 Apply knowledge of organisation to identify factors that will impact on risk control 3.4 Contribute to establishing the context of the risk-management process 3.5 Contribute to defining risk criteria
4. Contribute to risk assessment	4.1 Apply knowledge of workplace hazards and risks to contribute to risk identification 4.2 Apply knowledge of WHS legislation, risk assessment and workplace WHS information and data to contribute to risk

	analysis and evaluation
5. Contribute to risk treatment	5.1 Apply knowledge of WHS hazard and risk control, and WHS legislation to contribute to the selection of risk treatment options 5.2 Apply knowledge of the organisation's WHS management system (WHSMS) and WHS information system (WHSIS) to prepare and implement risk treatments
6. Contribute to monitoring, reviewing and recording risk-management process	6.1 Apply knowledge of the organisation's WHSMS to contribute to monitoring and reviewing risk-management process 6.2 Apply knowledge of the organisation's WHSIS to contribute to recording risk-management process

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to read and interpret relevant workplace information and data
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation, and with external parties and individuals
  - use language appropriate to the work team and the task
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of communication media
- literacy skills to write policies, procedures and plans
- numeracy skills to:
  - analyse workplace information and data
  - carry out calculations
  - identify trends
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to:
  - achieve continuous improvement
  - action processes about WHS matters

- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - interpret information and data.

Required knowledge

- difference between hazard and risk
- formal and informal communication and consultation processes, and key personnel related to communication
- how the characteristics and composition of the workforce impact on WHS risk and the management of WHS, including:
  - communication skills
  - cultural background and diversity
  - gender
  - labour market changes
  - language, literacy and numeracy levels of the workforce
  - structure and organisation of the workforce, including part time, casual and contract workers; shift rosters; and geographical location
  - workers with specific needs and limitations
  - workplace culture towards alcohol and other drug use
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- limitations of generic hazard identification and risk assessment checklists, and risk ranking processes
- nature of workplace processes (work flow, planning and control) and hazards relevant to the workplace
- organisational behaviour and culture as they impact on WHS and on change
- organisational culture as it impacts on the work team
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- other functional areas that impact on the management of WHS
- pertinent sections of relevant Australian standards and publications, including:
  - AS/NZS ISO 31000–2009 Risk Management – Principles and Guidelines
  - Standards Australia publication HB 327:2010 Communicating and consulting about risk (Companion to AS/NZS ISO 31000:2009)
  - Standards Australia publication HB 158-2010 Delivering assurance based on ISO 31000:2009 – Risk management – Principles and guidelines
- principles and practices of a systematic approach to managing WHS
- principles of duty of care, including concepts of causation, foreseeability and preventability
- principles of incident causation and injury processes

- range of risk analysis and assessment techniques and tools, and their application and limitations
- relevant commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material, and other relevant publications, including the Safe Work Australia model Code of Practice: How to Manage Work Health and Safety Risks
- risk as the effect of uncertainty on objectives
- risk management as a duty of persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers under WHS legislation
- roles and responsibilities of individuals and parties under WHS legislation
- sources of occupational disease and their prevention
- standard industry controls for a range of hazards
- techniques, tools and processes for identifying and controlling health and safety hazards and risks, including:
  - hazard and risk checklists
  - hazard hunts
  - job safety analyses
  - manifests and registers, including for dangerous goods, hazardous chemicals and plant
  - safe work method statements
  - surveys using questionnaires, interviews and other survey techniques
  - workplace inspections and walk throughs
- toxicology of hazardous chemicals and potential health effects in the workplace.

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS508B Participate in the investigation of incidents.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to plan, conduct and report on investigations of work health and safety (WHS) incidents that have resulted in, or have the potential to result in, injury or damage.

It covers conducting an initial assessment of the situation; establishing the scope and legal parameters of the investigation; conducting a systematic analysis to identify underlying causes and actions for prevention; and reporting on the outcomes of the investigation appropriate to the potential severity of the incident, which may include accessing specialist expertise.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals required to investigate incidents for prevention.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. - analytical skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - contribute to the assessment of resources needed to manage risk and where appropriate access these resources
  - develop actions, interventions or measures to prevent re-occurrence of the incident
  - identify areas for WHS improvement
  - make accurate observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
- communication skills to communicate effectively with individuals and parties at all stages of the investigation
- consultation and negotiation skills to support development and implementation of the investigation plan
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of communication media
- numeracy skills to develop and implement the investigation plan
- project-management skills to support development and implementation of the investigation plan
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - interpret information and data.

Required knowledge

- ethics related to professional practice
- how the characteristics and composition of the workforce impact on WHS risk and the management of WHS, including:
  - communication skills
  - cultural background and diversity
  - gender
  - labour market changes
  - language, literacy and numeracy levels of the workforce
  - structure and organisation of the workforce, for example part-time, casual and contract workers, shift rosters, geographical location
  - workers with specific needs and limitations
  - workplace culture towards alcohol and other drug use
- internal and external sources of information and data relevant to the investigation
- models of incident causation and injury processes
- nature of workplace processes (work flow, planning and control) and hazards relevant to the workplace

- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- requirements under WHS legislation for notifying and reporting incidents and enforcement notices; and rights and powers of WHS inspectors
- types and characteristics of incidents.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • investigation of WHS incidents in a systematic manner • initial assessment of the situation and the establishment of an investigation plan • recommendations arising from the investigation • identification of immediate and underlying causes, and construction of a timeline of events leading up to the incident with intervention points on the timeline for prevention and a root tree analysis.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • workplace documents and case studies and, where possible, real situations • office equipment and resources • other personnel involved in investigations.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • assessment of written reports on incidents • demonstration of techniques used to conduct WHS incident investigations • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• observation of performance in role plays • observation of presentations • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of requirements for reporting under WHS legislation, including notification and reporting of incidents • review of authenticated documents from the workplace • evaluation of area checks after an incident • scoping of the investigation • recording of documentary evidence • research of causative events.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other BSB07 WHS units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Incident includes:	• accidents
	• incidents as referred to in WHS legislation
	• major to minor incidents resulting in:
	  • major to minor injuries and diseases
	  • major to minor damage to property, equipment, work processes or the environment
	• near misses, where no injury or damage occurs.

Immediate needs may include:	• first aid • emergency evacuation and medical treatment • counselling and other personal support.
WHS legislative requirements may include:	• complying with specific requirements of WHS legislation relating to incident and incident notification, such as: • for registered major hazard facilities

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• reviewing general workplace management measures and specific hazard control measures following a notifiable incident • preserving incident sites • complying with non-disturbance notices.
WHS legislation may include:	• Acts • regulations • codes of practice.
Duty holders may include:	• as specified in WHS Acts: • persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers • workers • other persons at a workplace.
Individuals and parties may include:	• community • contractors • coroners • designers • government agencies, including WHS and emergency services agencies • importers • installers • insurance companies • internal and external specialists • managers and supervisors • manufacturers • media • occupational health and safety professionals • organisation's board • PCBUs or their officers • suppliers and distributors • union representatives • worker assistance personnel • workers and family members.
Barriers to investigation may include:	• availability of required resources, information and data, for example in relation to specific workplace issues, such as substance abuse • availability of witnesses • cultural issues • language • legal restrictions or limitations (temporary, short-term or long-term) • length of time from when incident occurred or was first identified • location and/or accessibility of site • management and worker attitude, including desire to protect self and others • political and community stakeholder sensitivity • time limits imposed • unsecured incident site.

Conceptual bases for the analysis includes:	• adopting an open-minded and objective approach • analysing policies, procedures, processes and systems in place at the time of the incident • focusing on the how, what and why of the incident • not focusing on individual behaviour or fault • using applicable models of causation and occurrence.
Timeline of events may include:	• events and processes that extend back in time as far as required to identify root causes • not just focusing on recent and immediate events and processes.

Root causes may include:	• workplace:
	  • policies
	  • procedures
	  • processes
	  • systems.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to contribute to the development and implementation of elements of a work health and safety management system (WHSMS).

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with organisational responsibilities to contribute to the development and implementation of elements of a WHSMS appropriate to the nature and scale of the organisation and its work health and safety (WHS) risks.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

	• review of communication of WHS information and data • evaluation of recommendations for improvement in prevention strategies.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS506A Contribute to developing, implementing and maintaining WHS management systems.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS legislation may include:	• Acts • regulations • codes of practice.

Duty holders may include:	• as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace.

WHS information may include:	• information relevant to the organisation and its needs, which will be a function of the size and nature of the organisation, and specific hazards in the workplace, such as:
	  • WHS legislative certifications, registrations and licensing
	  • workplace policies, procedures, processes and systems
	  • notices and other documents from WHS inspectors
	  • ergonomic information and data, such as job and task analyses

What users need from the system may include:	• usable and useful information that is easy to obtain and understand • easy ways to put information into the system • information content that meets the specific needs of individuals and parties, and enables them to contribute to WHS management and meet their WHS duties and responsibilities • information format (such as electronic, paper, signs, noticeboards, written, graphic and verbal) that is appropriate to the user and the nature of the information • integration with existing organisational management, quality, environmental and other systems as necessary • a system that is appropriate to the organisation and its specific needs • that it not require an unreasonable workload and resources to operate, maintain and develop • that it not be a barrier to WHS management and meeting WHS duties and responsibilities • that it not be an end in itself.

Workplace factors may include:	• management commitment to WHS
	• management style and organisational WHS skills and knowledge
	• nature of hazards and levels of risk
	• organisational structure
	• other management systems requiring interface or integration with the WHSIS
	• required level of security for WHSIS, including:
	  • prevention of theft and fraud
	  • access security
	  • prevention of interruption of services
	  • inadvertent release of material
	  • information and data destruction, corruption and alteration

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS506B Monitor and facilitate the management of hazards associated with plant.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage work health and safety (WHS) hazards associated with plant and to comply with WHS legislation as it applies to plant.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with responsibility for managing WHS hazards associated with plant and eliminating, or where this is not practicable, minimising the risks associated with plant.

The focus is on businesses or undertakings involving management or control of plant.

The focus is not on businesses or undertakings associated with the design of plant; manufacture of plant; supply of plant; installation, construction or commissioning of plant; or issuing of licences associated with plant.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Comply with WHS legislation as it applies to plant	1.1 Apply knowledge of WHS legislation to advise individuals and parties of their duties, rights and obligations with regard to plant as appropriate to their job roles and the nature of the organisation 1.2 Ensure the management of hazards associated with plant, complies with relevant WHS legislation and organisational policies, procedures, processes and systems
2. Ensure organisational policies, procedures, processes and systems incorporate management of hazards associated with plant	2.1 Apply knowledge of organisational policies, procedures, processes and systems to determine if they effectively manage hazards associated with plant 2.2 Develop and implement modifications to organisational policies, procedures, processes and systems as necessary to ensure hazards associated with plant are effectively managed 2.3 Follow organisational policies, procedures, processes and systems when managing hazards associated with plant
3. Identify WHS hazards	3.1 Access sources of information, data and advice to assist with

associated with plant	identifying hazards associated with plant 3.2 Identify and consult with others, as necessary, as part of hazard identification 3.3 Record and report on hazard identification
4. Assess WHS risks associated with plant	4.1 Access sources of information, data and advice to assist with assessing WHS risks associated with plant hazards 4.2 Identify and consult with others, as necessary, as part of WHS risk assessments 4.3 Record and report on WHS risk assessments
5. Control WHS risks associated with maintenance and continued safe use of plant	5.1 Access sources of information, data and advice, including the outcomes of risk assessments, to assist with developing risk-control options for hazards associated with the maintenance and continued safe use of plant 5.2 Identify, consult with and report to others as necessary during all stages of risk control 5.3 Develop risk control options and determine which options will be implemented 5.4 Implement, evaluate and monitor risk controls 5.5 Record and report on risk controls 5.6 Review implemented risk controls and recommend improvements, where necessary
6. Advise on registration, licensing and certification issues associated with plant	6.1 Identify types of plant requiring registration and tasks requiring operator licensing and/or certification, according to legislative requirements 6.2 Document registration, licensing and certification requirements and communicate them to individuals and parties 6.3 Identify, document and communicate training requirements to individuals and parties to meet registration, licensing and certification, according to legislative requirements 6.4 Determine training needs required for new plant and/or new operating methods 6.5 Ensure training is undertaken and completed prior to commencement of work using new plant and/or new operating methods 6.6 Monitor and report compliance with regulatory requirements for registration, licensing and certification 6.7 Identify, document and maintain appropriate records for plant and operator skill requirements

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - contribute to the assessment of resources needed to manage WHS and where appropriate access these resources
  - identify areas for risk control
  - make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation and WHS specialists
  - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of communication media
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to achieve change in WHS matters
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - interpret information and data
- technical skills to use basic measuring equipment, such as scales and dials applicable to specific hazards.

Required knowledge

- basic principles of incident causation and injury processes
- difference between hazard and risk

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- factors that impact on risk
- hierarchy of control and considerations for choosing between different risk controls
- high-risk work licences required for specific plant
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- language, literacy and cultural profile of the work team
- management of risk associated with plant as a duty of PCBUs or their officers under WHS legislation
- methods for providing evidence of compliance with WHS legislation
- nature of workplace processes (work flow, planning and control) and hazards relevant to the workplace
- organisational behaviour and culture as they impact on WHS and on change
- organisational culture as it impacts on the work team
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- other functional areas that impact on the management of WHS
- plant-specific knowledge:
  - basic physics of fluids under pressure and pressure vessels, and the behaviour of pressurised fluid when pressure is released
  - duties, rights and obligations of individuals and parties specified in WHS legislation
  - hazards associated with plant and systems of work associated with plant
  - industry practices related to permit to work, and isolation and tag out systems
  - registration requirements of plant, licensing and certification competencies
- principles and practices of a systematic approach to managing WHS
- strategies for guarding moving parts in machinery; human factors related to machine guarding; and safe design principles, features and limitations
- WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice and other instruments issued by WHS regulators.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • managing effective identification of hazards and developing risk control options for a range of plant, as defined in WHS legislation • knowledge of relevant WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• using relevant procedures and systems in the maintenance of plant • implementing general licensing and training requirements associated with plant • using machinery safety control measures to control plant risks.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • manufacturer manuals, including specifications and operational information and data • relevant WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidelines • sources of information, data and advice • workplace equipment and resources • workplace or simulated workplace.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of case studies and scenarios • assessment of written reports on the effectiveness of hazard identification, risk assessment, and control and management actions taken • demonstration of techniques used to identify hazards; assess associated risks; and determine, implement, monitor and evaluate risk control options • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of performance in role plays • presentations • review of recording and reporting on hazards associated with plant • review of the system for managing WHS associated with plant.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other BSB07 WHS units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS legislation may include:	• Acts • regulations • codes of practice.

Individuals and parties may include:	• contractors and subcontractors
	• duty holders as specified in WHS Acts:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace
	• WHS entry permit holders
	• WHS inspectors.

Plant may include:	• any machinery, equipment (including scaffolding), or appliance • electrical installation and plant, such as wiring, accessories, fittings, consuming devices, control and protective gear, converters and generators • mobile plant and load-shifting equipment • pressure equipment, such as boilers, pressure vessels and pressure piping.

Job roles and the nature of the organisation may include:	• job roles associated with plant in the organisation
	• how the organisation is involved with one or more of the following:
	  • management or control of plant
	  • design of plant
	  • manufacture of plant
	  • supply of plant
	  • installation, construction or commissioning of plant
	  • plant training
	  • issuing of licences associated with plant.

Hazards may include:	• source of potential harm in relation to:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• human injury or ill health • damage to property • damage to the environment • a combination of the above.
Sources of information, data and advice may include:	• accident and incident reports • audits • Australian and international standards • commonwealth and state or territory WHS regulators • industry bodies and groups • internet and the organisation's intranet • manufacturer and supplier manuals, specifications and other forms of advice and information • minutes of organisational WHS and other meetings, and other in-house information • Safe Work Australia • unions • WHS legislation • workplace inspections.
Others may include:	• experts in different aspects of the management of hazards associated with plant • individuals and parties as specified above • plant manufacturers, suppliers and designers • WHS inspectors • WHS regulators.
Recording and reporting may include:	• documents describing how tasks, projects, inspections, jobs and processes are undertaken • job and task statements • job safety analysis worksheets • maintenance and service logs, sheets, cards and diaries • standard operating procedures.

Risk control options may include:	• controls for access and egress risks, such as:
	  • to parts of plant that require cleaning or maintenance
	  • to operator’s workstation for normal and emergency conditions
	  • systems that enable safe access and egress, such as emergency lighting, safety doors and alarm systems
	• controls for dangerous part risks, such as potential contact or entrapment points to which the operator may be exposed during adjustment, examination, lubrication, maintenance and operation

	• controls for guarding risks, such as:
	  • permanently fixed physical barriers where no access of any part of a person is required
	  • interlocking physical barriers where access to dangerous areas is required during operation
	  • fixing physical barriers securely by means of fasteners or devices
	  • sensing safeguarding systems
	• controls for operational control risks, such as:
	  • being capable of locking in 'off' position to enable disconnection of all motive power and forces
	  • being guarded to prevent unintentional activation
	  • being of fail-safe type
	  • being readily and conveniently located
	  • being suitability identified
	  • having nature and function clearly indicated
	• controls for emergency stops and warning devices, such as:
	  • being able to avoid electrical or electronic circuit malfunction
	  • colouring push buttons, bars or handles red
	  • prominent, clear and durable markings
	• controls for registrations and design of plant
	• controls for operator certification risks
	• developing, documenting and communicating maintenance procedures to ensure plant is safe for use
	• ensuring modifications to plant are safe and suitable for the task and are appropriately documented, and modifying work practices as required for safe operation of plant
	• ensuring purchasing procedures include actions to address WHS implications of plant
	• identifying when permit to work procedures or certification are required to assist in ensuring a safe work environment
	• implementing and monitoring isolation procedures in liaison with individuals and parties to ensure continued safety of maintenance and other

Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to facilitate the development and use of hazard-management tools.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with responsibility for hazard management.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of work health and safety (WHS) roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Select and develop hazard-management tools	1.1 Apply knowledge of hazard-management tools, of the workplace and of WHS legislation to identify tools suitable for hazard management in the workplace 1.2 Consult with individuals and parties on suitable hazard-management tools 1.3 Modify existing hazard-management tools and/or develop new ones to meet workplace requirements 1.4 Determine hazard-management tools to be used in the workplace
2. Facilitate the use of hazard-management tools	2.1 Develop and conduct required training and instruction for individuals and parties who will use hazard-management tools 2.2 Consult and liaise with individuals, parties and work areas regarding logistical arrangements necessary for the use of hazard-management tools 2.3 Facilitate, in collaboration with individuals and parties, necessary logistical arrangements 2.4 Use and apply hazard-management tools 2.5 Provide necessary support to individuals and parties to use hazard-management tools
3. Communicate outcomes of use of hazard-management tools	3.1 Collate and analyse results and findings of the use of hazard-management tools 3.2 Communicate results, findings and outcomes to individuals and parties

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

4. Review use of hazard-management tools	4.1 Review usefulness and usability of hazard-management tools 4.2 Modify and/or change hazard-management tools to be used in the future based on the review outcomes 4.3 Modify future consultation, liaison, logistical arrangements and communications, based on the review outcomes

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - contribute to the assessment of resources needed
  - use tools and access resources
  - make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
  - pay attention to detail when making observations and recording outcomes
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation and WHS specialists
  - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of communication media
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to:
  - achieve continuous improvement and change in WHS matters
  - contribute to strategic WHS performance of the organisation
- research skills to obtain internal and external WHS information and data
- technical skills to use basic measuring equipment, such as scales and dials applicable to specific hazards.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Required knowledge

- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- language, literacy and cultural profile of the work team
- methods, techniques, procedures and processes to identify and assess hazards and risks, including their:
  - correct application and use
  - limitations
  - usefulness and usability
- nature of workplace processes (work flow, planning and control) and hazards relevant to the workplace
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- other functional areas that impact on the management of WHS
- techniques, tools and processes for identifying and controlling health and safety hazards and risks, including:
  - hazard and risk checklists
  - hazard hunts
  - job safety analyses
  - manifests and registers, including for dangerous goods, hazardous chemicals and plant
  - surveys using questionnaires, interviews and other survey techniques
  - safe work method statements
  - workplace inspections and walk throughs
- tools, techniques and methods to address specific physical or psychosocial hazards and risks
- WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice and other instruments issued by WHS regulators.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to contribute to the implementation of planning and response procedures for emergencies.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with supervisory responsibilities for managing work health and safety (WHS) in the workplace who contribute to the implementation of procedures for responding to emergencies. The unit assumes that expert advice will be available in identifying potential emergencies and in formulating response plans.

The focus of this unit is on implementation of procedures already developed for short-term emergency responses.

The unit applies to people who work in a range of WHS roles across all industries and who apply a substantial knowledge base and well-developed skills in a wide variety of WHS contexts.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. 3. Plan initial response procedures	3.1 Identify resources available and required for immediate response 3.2 Check emergency equipment to ensure serviceability, accessibility, cleanliness and correct location 3.3 Document actions required for a range of major types of emergency, taking account of standards, current industry practice, specialist advice and input by emergency agencies 3.4 Identify training needs and appropriate providers
4. Implement initial response procedures	4.1 Document and display actions for initial response 4.2 Outline own role in emergency response 4.3 Follow appropriate procedures
5. Contribute to post-event activities	5.1 Identify and support other personnel in the second response phase 5.2 Make contributions to debriefing processes
6. Monitor emergency response and address deficiencies	6.1 Monitor responses to emergencies for efficiency and timeliness, in consultation with stakeholders and, as appropriate, specialist advisors and agencies 6.2 Document, and promptly and appropriately report, results of monitoring to appropriate persons 6.3 Identify areas for organisational and personal improvement and make recommendations for improvement in response to analysis of response taken

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to communicate with people from a range of backgrounds and with a range of abilities
- information technology skills to access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
- interpersonal skills to issue instructions in an authoritative manner during emergencies

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- literacy skills to prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
- observation skills to evaluate the impact characteristics and composition of the workforce have on managing WHS
- organisational and time-management skills to sequence tasks and meet timelines
- research and data analysis skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - assess resources required to systematically manage WHS
  - evaluate interactions between workers, their activities, equipment, environment and work systems.

Required knowledge

- basic emergency prevention controls typically installed in a workplace:
  - emergency alerting systems
  - emergency protection systems
  - smoke alarms, fire alarms and fire extinguishers
  - required safety wear
  - security systems
- enterprise physical site and work areas
- enterprise reporting procedures in an emergency
- essential actions of self and others in an emergency
- hazards and precautions to be taken during an emergency
- hazards arising from evacuation
- information needs of emergency response personnel during reporting, arrival and response to an emergency
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- organisational and workplace WHS policies and procedures
- organisational structure, roles and responsibilities contributing to the implementation of emergency procedures
- powers of safety representatives and other authorised WHS personnel to cease work immediately if an immediate danger to WHS exists
- principles and priorities for evacuation, checking and accounting for people
- principles of fire protection and emergency response
- relevant commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material contributing to the implementation of emergency procedures
- roles and responsibilities of WHS personnel
- types of emergency responses typically used in workplaces
- WHS information needs of work unit or work team.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • other BSB07 WHS units.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS hazards may include:	• sources of potential harm in terms of human injury, ill health, damage to property, damage to the environment or a combination of these, such as:
	  • biological
	  • chemical
	  • environmental
	  • mechanical and/or electrical
	  • nuclear
	  • physical
	  • psychosocial
	  • radiological.

Relevant standards may include:	• Australian standards • industry-specific standards • international standards.

Potential emergencies may include:	• evacuation
	• explosion and bomb alerts
	• external emergencies and natural disasters, such as:
	  • explosion
	  • fire
	  • flood
	  • hazardous chemical spill
	  • storm
	  • traffic accident

	• internal emergencies, such as:
	  • loss of power
	  • loss of water supply
	  • structural collapse
	• security emergencies, such as:
	  • armed robberies
	  • intruders
	  • disturbed persons
	• serious injury events.

Stakeholders may include:	• community
	• contractors and subcontractors
	• duty holders as specified in WHS Acts, including:
	  • PCBUs or their officers
	  • workers
	  • other persons at a workplace
	• health and safety representatives
	• health and safety committees
	• workers.

Specialist advisors may include:	• internal or external advisors in:
	  • chemicals
	  • emergency response
	  • engineering
	  • safety
	  • security.

Emergency agencies may include:	• ambulance • fire and emergency services • government departments • hazardous materials response teams (HazMat) • police • WHS authorities.
Risk register may include:	• lists of hazards • location of hazards • outcomes of any risk assessment or risk ranking • range of possible scenarios or circumstances under which an emergency could occur, including natural disasters.
Resources may include:	• emergency response personnel and equipment • fire and emergency services personnel • first aid personnel and equipment.
Emergency equipment may	• clothing items, such as coloured hats and vests

4. Assist with evaluating and implementing measures to comply with legal frameworks relevant to WHS	4.1 Assist with assessing how the workplace complies with WHS and other relevant legislation 4.2 Assist with identifying the training needs of individuals and parties about duties, rights and obligations 4.3 Assist with developing, delivering and evaluating training to meet identified training needs and any legal requirements for training 4.4 Assist with developing, implementing and evaluating changes to workplace procedures, activities, processes, policies and systems that will achieve compliance

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - read and understand WHS-related legislation and information
  - identify, analyse and address training needs
- communication skills to:
  - communicate with and advise people from a range of backgrounds and with a range of abilities
  - work with legal advisors and others
- literacy skills to prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers.

Required knowledge

- duties, rights and obligations of individuals and parties as specified in relevant WHS legislation and where this information is located in WHS legislation
- effective consultation and participation processes
- existing work health and safety information system (WHSIS) or other workplace information systems
- functions and powers of WHS regulator, and how they are exercised
- limits of own skills, knowledge and competence when providing assistance
- objectives and principles underpinning WHS legislation and related legislation

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- relationship between the WHS Act, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material, and other legislation relevant to WHS
- relevant sections of commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards, guidance material and other instruments
- sources of information about WHS legislation and related legislation
- systematic approaches to managing and complying with WHS legislation
- workplace policies, procedures, activities, processes and systems that will achieve compliance with WHS legislation and related legislation.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • assisting with determining current and future legal frameworks relevant to WHS in the workplace • assisting with providing advice about legal and regulatory frameworks for WHS legislation • providing advice on WHS-related legal compliance issues, including training needs analyses, talks, briefings, training sessions, and paper-based or electronic materials • seeking timely and relevant advice from legal advisors and others • using this advice to ensure legislative compliance.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • relevant Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards and guidance material • other appropriate workplace documentation • reports from other parties consulted in ensuring compliance with WHS-related legislation.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • demonstration of activities used to assist with compliance with WHS legislation and related legislation • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of how advice was provided in the workplace, interpreting and applying legislation, and reporting requirements of legislation • review of WHS action plans, documented WHS training needs and associated documents, and recording processes undertaken to ensure WHS-related compliance • simulated project-based activities, scenarios, case studies, role plays or actual activities associated with applying legislative frameworks for WHS.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS602A Facilitate WHS activities • BSBWHS603A Implement WHS risk management • BSBWHS604A Evaluate the WHS performance organisations.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Legal advisors and others may include:	• lawyers • WHS inspectors • WHS regulators • other regulators • WHS specialists.

Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to identify, engage, communicate and work effectively with key work health and safety (WHS) personnel and stakeholders; and to work with WHS and other professionals.

It involves identifying and engaging with key WHS personnel and stakeholders, selecting communication strategies to provide them with information and tools for managing WHS, and gaining feedback to evaluate the effectiveness of facilitation processes.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals who are required to coordinate and facilitate WHS activities. Working with WHS and other professionals is also an important component of facilitation.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

BSBWHS604A Evaluate the WHS performance of organisations

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to evaluate an organisation's arrangements for identifying hazards, assessing and controlling risks, monitoring and improving the effectiveness of the management of work health and safety (WHS), and complying with agreed benchmarks.

Application of the Unit

This unit focuses on evaluation of the effectiveness of an organisation's management of WHS.

Aspects of integration with other organisational management systems, and the appropriateness of participative arrangements and WHS improvements are some components of the evaluation.

The scope of this work may include WHS performance measures and outcomes, strategies, policies, programs, procedures and the organisation's resources.

The unit applies to people who apply advanced practical knowledge to coordinate, facilitate and maintain the WHS program in an organisation.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

	2.3 Evaluate risk controls for suitability and effectiveness in relation to the organisation's management of WHS
3. Evaluate the effectiveness of the organisation's processes for monitoring WHS	3.1 Identify organisational processes to monitor the implementation and status of its WHS management 3.2 Evaluate the quality of information and data obtained from the monitoring processes 3.3 Evaluate management's response to issues identified by the monitoring processes
4. Assess outcomes of the organisation's arrangements for managing WHS	4.1 Evaluate performance indicators, including positive performance indicators (PPIs), to determine whether they provide a true, reliable and timely measure of the effectiveness of the organisation's WHS management 4.2 Compare reported performance with evidence gathered and document the differences 4.3 Evaluate WHS performance outcomes and document them in a clear and objective manner 4.4 Determine whether arrangements for managing WHS have produced improvement in WHS risk management
5. Assess and advise on the organisation's WHS compliance against agreed benchmarks	5.1 Undertake systematic analysis to identify areas of WHS compliance and non-compliance with agreed benchmarks 5.2 Provide advice on compliance with WHS legislation with regard to the organisation's arrangements for managing WHS 5.3 Document outcomes of evaluation of compliance and report to key personnel and stakeholders

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - interpret information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
  - use relevant workplace information and data

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings
  - employ consultation and negotiation skills to develop plans, and to implement and monitor designated actions
  - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
  - relate to personnel at all levels of the organisation, WHS specialists and, as required, emergency services personnel
  - use language appropriate to the work team and the task
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - analyse and evaluate a range of information and data formats, including graphs, maps, matrices and technical reports
  - prepare reports
  - use a range of communication media
  - use electronic information and data systems to enter workplace information and data and produce graphical representation
- numeracy skills to carry out simple statistical analysis, including mean, standard deviation and regression
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to:
  - achieve continuous improvement and change in WHS matters
  - contribute to strategic WHS performance of the organisation
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - pay attention to detail when making observations and recording outcomes
  - use information and data-gathering techniques, such as brainstorming, polling and interviewing.

Required knowledge

- commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations, codes of practice, standards, guidance material and links to other relevant legislation, including industrial relations, equal employment opportunity, workers' compensation, and rehabilitation
- concept of common law duty of care
- development of WHS performance assessment tools, such as PPIs
- difference between common law and statutory law
- ethics related to professional practice
- formal and informal communication and consultation processes, and key personnel related to communication

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- language, literacy and cultural profile of the work team
- legal liability in relation to providing advice
- legislative requirements for WHS information and data, and consultation
- limitations of generic hazard identification and risk assessment checklists, and risk ranking processes
- methods for collecting reliable information and data, commonly encountered problems in collection, and strategies for overcoming such problems
- methods for providing evidence of compliance with WHS legislation
- nature and use of information and data that provide valid and reliable results on performance of WHS management processes (including PPIs) and limitations of other types of measures
- nature of workplace processes (work flow, planning and control) and hazards relevant to the workplace
- organisational culture as it impacts on the work team
- organisational WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- principles and practices of a systematic approach to managing WHS
- principles of duty of care, including concepts of causation, foreseeability and preventability
- principles of effective meetings, including agendas, action planning, chair and secretarial duties, minutes and action items
- range of risk analysis and assessment techniques and tools, and their application and limitations
- requirements for recordkeeping that address WHS, privacy and other relevant legislation
- requirements for reporting under WHS and other relevant legislation, including obligations for notification and reporting of incidents
- requirements under hazard-specific WHS legislation and codes of practice
- risk management as a duty of PCBUs or their officers under WHS legislation
- roles and responsibilities in relation to communication and consultation for health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, line management, workers and inspectors
- sampling methodologies, application and related statistical measures
- standard industry controls for a range of hazards
- techniques, tools and processes for identifying and controlling health and safety hazards and risks:
  - hazard and risk checklists
  - hazard hunts
  - job safety analyses
  - manifests and registers, including for dangerous goods, hazardous chemicals and plant
  - safe work method statements
  - surveys using questionnaires, interviews and other survey techniques
  - workplace inspections and walk throughs.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • making a comprehensive assessment of an organisation's WHS performance • focusing on the organisation's strategic planning in relation to WHS • knowledge of the nature and use of information and data that provide valid and reliable results on performance of WHS management processes (including PPIs) and limitations of other types of measures.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • a workplace, including personnel involved in areas to be evaluated • organisational documentation, information and data.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • demonstration of techniques used in reviewing the organisation's WHS performance • observation of performance in role plays • observation of presentations • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of roles and responsibilities under WHS legislation of workers, supervisors, contractors and WHS inspectors • evaluation of the organisation's risk assessment tools and processes • evaluation and documentation of performance outcomes • review of report developed to document outcomes of evaluation of compliance.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS601A Apply legislative frameworks for WHS • BSBWHS602A Facilitate WHS activities • BSBWHS603A Implement WHS risk management • BSBWHS606A Conduct a WHS audit.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Hazards of long latency may include:	• conditions, illnesses and other health risks that result from longer-term exposure to specific triggers and do not manifest themselves in the short-term, such as:
	  • chemicals
	  • noise
	  • psychosocial factors
	  • radiation.

Hazards of low frequency/high consequence may include:	• high impact events that may result in very serious injury, death or multiple death situations that occur rarely, such as:
	  • building collapses
	  • explosions
	  • fires.

Persons other than workers may include:	• contractors • customers/clients

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	• neighbourhood or local community members • visitors.

Organisational factors may include:	• authority
	• geographical spread of sites
	• nature of hazards and level of risk
	• other management systems requiring interface or integration with management of WHS
	• participatory arrangements
	• reporting structure
	• roster and shift arrangements
	• supervision structure
	• workforce structure, such as:
	  • contractors
	  • cultural diversity
	  • labour hire
	  • part-time and casual workers
	• workplace culture, including industrial relations and safety culture.

Specialist personnel may include:	• external consultants specialising in specific areas of WHS, such as:
	  • ergonomics
	  • occupational health
	  • occupational hygiene
	  • psychology
	  • safety engineering
	  • toxicology
	• specialist staff within government agencies offering assistance in specialist or problem areas within WHS.

Benchmarks may include:	• industry-specific standards • organisation's business plan • specific legislation • WHS management system standards.
WHS legislation may include:	• Acts • regulations • codes of practice.
Key personnel and stakeholders may include:	• board/committee of management and shareholders • customers/clients • management, persons in control of the workplace, and supervisors • workers and other parties across a range of levels

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS601B Develop a systematic approach to managing OHS.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to develop, implement and maintain a work health and safety management system (WHSMS) or elements thereof.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to individuals with organisational responsibilities to develop, implement and maintain a WHSMS appropriate to the nature and scale of the organisation and its work health and safety (WHS) risks.

The unit applies to people who apply advanced practical knowledge to coordinate, facilitate and maintain the WHS program in an organisation.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Support and facilitate the implementation of a WHSMS	1.1 Determine the form, content, purposes and functions of a WHSMS appropriate to the organisation and its WHS risks 1.2 Consult effectively with individuals and parties about the form, content, purposes and functions of a WHSMS and its implementation 1.3 Facilitate agreement of individuals and parties to implementing a WHSMS
2. Develop WHS policy and commitment to a WHSMS	2.1 Communicate to individuals and parties the WHS policy requirements and commitment requirements to implement a WHSMS 2.2 Develop and implement an initial WHS review, as required, appropriate to own job role 2.3 Develop WHS policy that meets organisational requirements and is appropriate to the organisation 2.4 Facilitate and support the participation of, and consultation with, individuals and parties in developing and agreeing to WHS policy 2.5 Document WHS policy and communicate it to individuals and parties

3. Develop a WHS plan	3.1 Communicate to individuals and parties the requirements of a WHS plan 3.2 Work with individuals and parties to produce a WHS plan appropriate to the organisation that meets requirements 3.3 Facilitate and support the participation of, and consultation with, individuals and parties in building and agreeing to a WHS plan
4. Implement the WHS plan	4.1 Communicate to individuals and parties the WHS plan implementation requirements, as appropriate to the organisation 4.2 Facilitate and support the participation of, and consultation with, individuals and parties in implementing the WHS plan 4.3 Work with individuals and parties to ensure policies, procedures, processes and systems support implementation of the WHS plan, as appropriate to own job role
5. Measure and evaluate WHS performance	5.1 Communicate to individuals and parties the measurement and evaluation requirements of the WHS plan as appropriate to the organisation 5.2 Facilitate and support the participation of, and consultation with, individuals and parties in measuring and evaluating WHS performance 5.3 Assess policies, procedures, systems and processes in relation to their ability to support implementation of the WHS plan, as appropriate to own job role
6. Review and improve the WHSMS	6.1 Communicate to individuals and parties the review and improvement requirements of the WHSMS as appropriate to the organisation 6.2 Facilitate and support the participation of, and consultation with, individuals and parties in reviewing and improving the WHSMS 6.3 Document review outcomes and suggested WHSMS improvements, as appropriate to own job role, and submit to management for consideration

BSBWHS606A Conduct a WHS audit

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS608B Conduct an OHS audit.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to conduct an internal work health and safety (WHS) audit, or an external WHS audit under the guidance of a lead auditor, which may or may not be part of certification against a recognised benchmark or standard.

It involves systematic examination against audit criteria to determine conformance to planned arrangements for the management of WHS.

The unit includes developing an audit plan and tools to gather WHS information and data, ensuring client/management liaison and briefing, arranging access to information, setting up entry and exit meetings, coordinating evaluation/audit and audit team, and submitting reports.

The scope and benchmark criteria for the audit will be agreed before the commencement of WHS information and data gathering and may address all areas of the organisation or an identified function, business or geographical area.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to personnel required to conduct a WHS audit.

It applies to the auditing of a systematic approach to managing WHS (which may or may not be formalised as part of a WHS management system) and can be against internal or external benchmarks.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

A WHS audit may be conducted by an individual or by a team and may be concurrent with other management system audits or conducted as a standalone exercise.

This unit does not cover evaluation of the organisation's overall WHS performance, which is addressed in BSBWHS604A Evaluate the WHS performance of organisations.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Prepare for a WHS audit	1.1 Define the scope, objectives and benchmarks of the audit 1.2 Identify and obtain relevant documentation, including preliminary material, on the operation of the organisation

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	1.3 Identify and arrange resources required to conduct the audit 1.4 Assign timing, schedule and responsibilities for the audit
2. Develop a WHS audit plan	2.1 Ensure nature of information and data collected provides valid and reliable evidence of the systematic approach to managing WHS and risk controls within the context of the organisation 2.2 Include key personnel and stakeholders in sources of evidence 2.3 Ensure information and data-collection strategies address issues of security, confidentiality, impartiality and equity 2.4 Include opportunities for corroborating evidence in information and data-collection strategies 2.5 Document audit plan and submit to key personnel and stakeholders for consultation and feedback 2.6 Modify audit plan as a result of feedback from key personnel and stakeholders 2.7 Re-submit audit plan to key personnel and stakeholders for comment as appropriate 2.8 Negotiate issues concerning audit plan with key personnel and stakeholders, and amend documents where required
3. Select appropriate WHS audit tools	3.1 Ensure audit tools accurately reflect the criteria of the benchmark, nature of risks, identified relevant information and data types 3.2 Ensure audit tools focus on WHS management processes 3.3 Ensure audit tools can be used with consistent outcomes by all members of the audit team 3.4 Ensure audit tools can collect evidence in a timely and efficient manner 3.5 Trial audit tools and modify as required
4. Gather information, data and WHS records	4.1 Consult a broad range of workplace personnel during evidence-gathering activities 4.2 Gather information, data and WHS records, compare with the audit plan and identify reasons for discrepancies 4.3 Identify and use alternative methods when required information, data and WHS records are not forthcoming using planned methods 4.4 Check reliability and validity of information, data and WHS records with a number of sources

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Benchmarks may include:	• Australian and international standards • industry standards • standards developed by WHS regulators • other standards developed or adopted for internal use by the organisation.
Relevant documentation may include:	• codes of practice • guidance material • industry standards • organisational documents • WHS legislation.
Resources may include:	• equipment • specialist personnel.

Information and data collected may include:	• complaints
	• enforcement/compliance notices and actions
	• hazard logs
	• incident and injury reports
	• information and data changes since last audit, such as new equipment, processes, products, substances or projects
	• interviews with management, supervisors, work groups, workers and other parties across a range of levels and roles, including:
	  • health and safety representatives
	  • WHS committee members
	  • design personnel
	  • contractors
	• legal reports
	• management system documentation, including:

	  • maintenance reports
	  • minutes of meetings
	  • schedules
	• previous management system reports and industry risk profiles
	• reports and management reviews
	• surveillance audits
	• training materials and records
	• workers' compensation claims.

Systematic approach to managing WHS may include:	• comprehensive set of processes that are combined in a methodical and ordered manner to minimise the risk of injury or ill health in the workplace, such as:
	  • allocation of resources
	  • communication and consultation
	  • hazard management
	  • processes of WHS planning
	  • recordkeeping and reporting
	  • review and evaluation for ongoing WHS improvement
	  • training and competency development.

Key personnel and stakeholders may include:	• customers/clients
	• managers and supervisors
	• persons in control of the workplace, PCBUs or their officers
	• persons across a range of levels and roles, including:
	  • health and safety representatives
	  • workers
	  • health and safety committee members
	  • design personnel
	  • contractors, where appropriate.

Audit plan may include:	• information and data required to be on hand • locations to be inspected • meetings to be scheduled and people to be interviewed • personnel involved • sampling methodology, including statistical measures • scope of audit • timelines.

Audit tools may include:	• instruments for collecting evidence and conducting the analysis and evaluation (not the same as the audit criteria or benchmark):
	  • which may be:
	  • adapted from existing tools
	  • developed specifically for the purpose
	  • purchased or accessed from existing tools
	  • which may include:
	  • descriptions of required characteristics to be checked
	  • limitations of and instructions for use
	  • performance checklists
	  • sets of questions to be asked.

Alternative methods may include:	• alternative sampling methodologies • alternative information and data • discussion groups • how evidence deficiencies will be addressed • interviewing • modified audit checklists • observation • surveys.

Preliminary evaluation may include:	• off-site consultations
	• reviews of relevant organisational:
	  • documentation
	  • information
	  • data.

Objective evidence may include:	• information and data obtained through:
	  • observation
	  • measurement
	  • tests
	  • other means.

Follow-up processes may include:	• agreed meeting date with the organisation, allowing sufficient time for implementation of corrective actions, which may include: • checks of the rigour of original audit findings

BSBWHS607A Apply ergonomics to manage WHS hazards and risks

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS604B Apply ergonomic principles to control OHS risk.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to apply ergonomics to manage work health and safety (WHS) hazards and risks.

This unit addresses the principles, processes and methods of ergonomics and their application to the management of WHS hazards and risks. It enables improved management of WHS through an understanding of how ergonomics contributes to WHS management; the appropriate application of ergonomics principles, processes and methods; and working with ergonomists and other specialists.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to people who manage WHS hazards and risks and who need to consider the role ergonomics plays in this process. Working with ergonomists may be required as part of this role.

The unit applies to people who apply advanced practical knowledge to coordinate, facilitate and maintain the WHS program within an organisation.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

Employability Skills Information

This unit contains employability skills.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Element	Performance Criteria
Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Identify WHS hazards and risks whose management could include the application of ergonomics	1.1 Use workplace WHS information to identify WHS hazards and risks 1.2. Apply knowledge of ergonomics principles, processes and methods to identify workplace WHS hazards and risks whose management could include the application of ergonomics
2. Use ergonomics to address WHS issues	2.1 Apply ergonomics principles, processes and methods in the assessment of WHS hazards and risks 2.2. Apply ergonomics principles, processes and methods in the development of risk controls 2.3. Apply ergonomics principles, processes and methods in the evaluation of risk controls
3. Apply ergonomics in WHS-related planning and design activities	3.1 Identify WHS-related planning and design activities and processes 3.2. Identify opportunities for the application of ergonomics principles, processes and methods to enhance WHS-related planning and design activities 3.3. Apply ergonomics principles, processes and methods to enhance WHS-related planning and design activities 3.4. Review and evaluate enhancements to WHS-related planning and design activities

4. Ensure ergonomics activities are appropriate	4.1 Ensure ergonomics activities comply with all applicable WHS legislation, regulations, codes of practice and other relevant documents 4.2 Ensure ergonomics activities comply with relevant workplace processes, procedures, standards and systems 4.3 Apply appropriate ergonomics principles, processes and methods according to available resources and own role, responsibilities, skill and knowledge 4.4 Seek advice, support and input from specialists where necessary and appropriate

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - identify areas for WHS improvement
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data, and make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
  - contribute to the assessment of resources needed to manage WHS and where appropriate access these resources
  - contribute to the strategic WHS performance of the organisation
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation, and with external parties and individuals
  - use language appropriate to the work team and the task
  - write policies, procedures and plans
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- information technology skills to access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to achieve continuous improvement and to action processes about WHS matters
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - interpret information and data
  - pay attention to detail when making observations and recording outcomes
  - use information and data-gathering techniques, such as brainstorming, polling and interviewing.

Required knowledge

- application domains of ergonomics
- broad overview of the knowledge base, skills, methods, techniques, expertise, roles and functions of ergonomists
- ergonomics as the scientific discipline concerned with the understanding of the interactions among humans and other elements of a system, and the profession that applies theoretical principles, data and methods to design in order to optimise human wellbeing and overall system performance
- ergonomics principles, processes and methods applicable to the management of WHS hazards and risks, and WHS-related planning and design activities and processes
- ergonomics-related content of applicable WHS legislation, regulations, codes of practice and other documents, such as policies, standards, guidance publications and alerts issued by the relevant WHS regulators
- general principles and processes of ergonomics
- risk management as a duty of persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers under WHS legislation
- scope and broad content of Australian and international ergonomics standards
- systems and systems concepts as used in ergonomics.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment	Evidence of the following is essential:

and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	• applying ergonomics principles, processes and methods in the assessment of a range of WHS hazards and risks, and in the development and evaluation of risk controls • applying ergonomics principles, processes and methods to enhance WHS-related planning and design activities • working with specialists to manage WHS hazards and risks • knowledge of current approaches to and developments in ergonomics in the workplace.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • a workplace • relevant legislation, standards, guidelines, information and data • reports from other parties consulted in developing ergonomics interventions.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • analysis of responses to case studies and scenarios • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party reports of on-the-job performance by the candidate • observation of presentations • oral or written questioning to assess knowledge of ergonomics principles, processes and methods applicable to the management of WHS hazards and risks, and WHS-related planning and design activities and processes • written examples and reports on the review and outcomes of ergonomics recommendations made to manage WHS risks and hazards and to enhance WHS-related planning and design activities.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example: • BSBWHS609A Advise on the application of safe

	design principles to control WHS risks.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS hazards and risks may include:	• bullying • fatigue • hazardous physical and/or mental workloads • lighting • manual handling • noise and infrasound • plant-related hazards and risks • psychosocial hazards • shift work and extended shifts • vibration • work stress • workplace layout hazards.
WHS-related planning and design activities and processes may include:	• work and workplace systems • workstations and work areas • jobs and tasks • physical and psychosocial work environments • shift work and general work rosters • workplace policies, procedures, processes and structures • workplace communications systems and processes • WHS management systems • information technology systems • plant, equipment and tools, including their specification and acquisition • specification and acquisition of services • maintenance processes and procedures.
Other relevant documents may include:	• policies • standards • guidance publications

BSBWHS608A Assist with applying occupational hygiene to manage WHS hazards and risks

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS605B Apply occupational hygiene principles to control OHS risk.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to assist with the application of occupational hygiene principles, knowledge and techniques to manage work health and safety (WHS) hazards and risks.

Application of the Unit

This unit addresses the application of occupational hygiene principles, knowledge, skills and techniques in managing WHS hazards and risks. It enables improved management of WHS through an understanding of how occupational hygiene contributes to WHS management; the appropriate application of occupational hygiene knowledge, skills and techniques; and working with occupational hygienists and other specialists.

The unit applies to people who assist with applying occupational hygiene to manage WHS hazards and risks. People who are required to assist with the monitoring of a range of physical agents and/or conditions in the workplace should use BSBWHS409A Assist with workplace monitoring processes.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

	2.5 Assist with reporting the results of assessments, interpretations and recommendations to individuals and parties
	2.6 Assist with ensuring reporting is understandable and meaningful and that format, form and content meet the needs of individuals and parties
3. Assist with the design and implementation of risk controls	3.1 Apply the hierarchy of control when assisting with the design of risk-control strategies
	3.2 Assist with identifying problems with existing risk controls and providing remedial advice
	3.3 Assist with developing, selecting and implementing risk controls and ensuring effective consultation with, and participation of, individuals and parties
	3.4 Access external sources of information and data, WHS specialists and other advisors as required, about the nature and level of health hazards, risks and risk controls
4. Assist with monitoring and evaluating risk controls	4.1 Assist with monitoring and evaluating risk controls in consultation with individuals and parties
	4.2 Assist with modifying risk controls in consultation with individuals and parties
	4.3 Identify and document training needs associated with hazard and risk controls, and arrange training in consultation with individuals and parties
	4.4 Assist with making recommendations about future risk controls as a result of evaluation and monitoring
5. Ensure occupational hygiene activities are appropriate	5.1 Ensure occupational hygiene activities comply with all applicable WHS legislation, regulations and codes of practice
	5.2 Ensure occupational hygiene activities comply with relevant organisational and workplace procedures, processes, standards and systems
	5.3 Apply appropriate occupational hygiene principles, knowledge, skills and techniques according to available resources and own role, responsibilities, skills and knowledge
	5.4 Seek advice, support and input from WHS specialists and other advisors where necessary and appropriate

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation and WHS specialists
  - use language and literacy appropriate to the work team and the task
  - write policies, procedures and plans
- consultation and negotiation skills to:
  - develop plans
  - implement and monitor designated actions
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of media
- numeracy skills to:
  - assist with analysing and interpreting results from workplace measurements
  - use electronic information and data systems to enter workplace information and data
  - use measuring equipment applicable to selected hazards, such as scales and dials
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to achieve continuous improvement and change in WHS matters
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - interpret information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - pay attention to detail when making observations and recording outcomes.

Required knowledge

- common controls for a range of hazards and risks, their effectiveness and their limitations
- how occupational hygienists work with WHS personnel, individuals and parties in the workplace to control WHS hazards and risks
- organisational and workplace WHS policies, procedures, processes and systems
- overview of:
  - analysis, interpretation and reporting of the results of occupational hygiene assessments and investigations

- characteristics of WHS hazards and risks addressed by occupational hygiene, their effects on people and how these effects occur
- exposure standards, and other standards and guidelines used in occupational hygiene, including their limitations and practical applications
- how recommendations for occupational hygiene risk controls are developed, implemented and evaluated
- nature and scope of risk controls, including the hierarchy of control in relation to occupational hygiene
- occupational hygiene principles, knowledge, skills, techniques and methodologies
- roles and functions of occupational medicine physicians, other medical doctors and toxicologists
- sources and routes of exposure of hazards and risks addressed by occupational hygiene
- training, education, roles, functions and skills of occupational hygienists
- types, purposes, functions and use of occupational hygiene equipment

- requirements for individual training and instruction in the fitting, use, maintenance and storage of a range of personal protective equipment (PPE)
- requirements for selection and limitations of use of PPE
- risk management as a duty of persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers under WHS legislation
- sources of occupational disease and their prevention
- WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice with particular relevance to occupational hygiene
- workplace processes, activities, jobs and tasks.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

WHS hazards and risks may include:	• biological agents, such as:
	  • viruses
	  • bacteria
	  • zoonoses
	  • animals
	  • animal products
	  • plants and plant products
	  • allergens
	• hazardous chemicals and dangerous goods in different states, such as:

BSBWHS609A Advise on the application of safe design principles to control WHS risks

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 1	This Unit first released with BSB07 Business Training Package version 7.0. Replaces and is equivalent to BSBOHS607B Advise on application of safe design principles to control OHS risk.

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to advise on applying safe design principles to control work health and safety (WHS) risks during a product's life cycle.

Application of the Unit

The central feature of safe design is the application of relevant information and data about human experience, capabilities and behaviour to the design of objects, facilities, procedures and environments that people use. The unit applies to individuals who are in a position to provide advice on the application of safe design principles in their organisation, which may be involved in one or more stages of the product life cycle.

NOTE: The terms Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) and Work Health and Safety (WHS) are equivalent and generally either can be used in the workplace. In jurisdictions where the National Model WHS Legislation has not been implemented RTOs are advised to contextualise the unit of competency by referring to the existing State/Territory OHS legislative requirements.

2. Advise on the development of a systematic WHS hazard identification and WHS risk assessment system for safe design	2.1 Advise on the identification of WHS hazards and the conduct of a WHS risk assessment across the life cycle of the designed product 2.2 Advise on the selection and implementation of the most appropriate WHS risk controls for the designed product from a systematic analysis of the risk (the likelihood and consequences of injury or illness) arising from exposure to identified WHS hazards 2.3 Advise on ensuring WHS hazard identification, WHS risk assessment and WHS risk controls include potential alterations to the designed product during its life 2.4 Advise on documenting decision making during the WHS risk-assessment process and making documentation accessible to all parties 2.5 Advise on the establishment of a residual WHS risk register and the distribution of this information to those involved in the downstream or subsequent life cycle stages 2.6 Advise on monitoring the design as it evolves to identify potential new WHS hazards and risks and to manage WHS hazards and risks if they become evident
3. Advise on the principles of WHS risk controls	3.1 Use the hierarchy of control to advise on WHS risk controls in design 3.2 Advise on minimising the impact of possible failure or defect by ensuring the designed product includes fail-to-safe action
4. Advise on consultation processes in the life cycle of the designed product	4.1 Advise decision makers to consider the needs of the range of people who will use or interact with the designed product 4.2 Advise on arranging consultation between all parties during the concept and detailed design phases to identify WHS hazards and control WHS risks 4.3 Advise on appropriately communicating residual WHS risks in the designed product to those who will use or interact with the designed product throughout its life cycle
5. Advise on procurement systems to minimise ‘purchased’ WHS hazards and risks	5.1 Advise decision makers involved in purchasing and contractual arrangements to include a requirement to identify WHS hazards, control WHS risks, and provide information and data on residual WHS risks 5.2 Advise on including an agreement to carry out a safe design approach in the design brief or draft specifications

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - analyse relevant workplace information and data
  - make observations of workplace tasks and interactions between people, their activities, equipment, environment and systems
- communication skills to:
  - conduct effective formal and informal meetings and communicate effectively with personnel at all levels of the organisation and WHS specialists
  - prepare reports for a range of target groups, including health and safety committees, health and safety representatives, managers, supervisors, and persons conducting businesses or undertakings (PCBUs) or their officers
  - use language appropriate to the work team and the task
- information technology skills to:
  - access and download internal and external information and data on WHS
  - use a range of media
- organisational skills to manage own tasks within a timeframe
- project-management skills to achieve continuous improvement and change in WHS matters
- research skills to:
  - access relevant WHS information and data
  - identify areas for improvement
  - interpret information and data
  - pay attention to detail when making observations and recording outcomes
  - use information and data-gathering techniques, such as brainstorming, polling and interviewing.

Required knowledge

- basic human cognitive and perceptual capabilities and other basic and fundamental factors relevant to the design of human–machine interfaces
- basic knowledge of psychosocial factors, occupational violence, shift work, repetitive work, awkward postures, lighting, thermal environment and work layout
- basics of anthropometry and biomechanics

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- commonwealth and state or territory WHS Acts, regulations and codes of practice and other relevant publications and guidelines relating to information and data, consultation, participation and safe design, such as the Safe Work Australia Guidance on the Principles of Safe Design for Work and the Safe Work Australia model Code of Practice: Safe Design of Structures
- direct and indirect factors that impact on WHS and the environment in the design of products
- formal and informal communication and consultation processes, and key personnel related to communication
- hierarchy of control and criteria for choosing between different WHS risk controls
- internal and external sources of WHS information and data, and how to access them
- key personnel, including change agents, within workplace management structure
- legal liability in relation to providing advice
- organisational behaviour and culture as they impact on WHS and on change
- pertinent sections of relevant Australian standards and other standards
- risk management and the principles and practices of a systematic approach to managing WHS
- WHS legislative duties of PCBUs or their officers who are designers to eliminate hazards at the design stage.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • applying a range of WHS risk controls in a collaborative safe design process • providing advice on a range of safe design principles at different stages of the product life cycle • use of products developed in applying WHS risk controls in a safe design process • knowledge of professional liability in relation to providing advice.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • reports from other parties consulted, in developing

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Decision maker may include:	• any party with influence over, or legal duties regarding the specifications of, the designed product, including:
	  • client or commissioning agent
	  • designer
	  • financier
	  • manufacturer
	  • supplier
	  • purchaser
	  • installer
	  • user
	  • insurer
	  • importer
	  • erector
	  • maintainer
	  • regulator
	  • worker, PCBU or their officer.

Life cycle may include:	• design • construction and manufacture • transport, supply and installation • use, maintenance and servicing • decommissioning and dismantling • disposal.
WHS risk assessment may include:	• identifying hazards and risks • defining the range and severity of possible consequences associated with identified hazards and risks • deciding the likelihood of each consequence • assessing the effectiveness of existing WHS risk controls • comparing WHS hazards and WHS risks against pre-established criteria for tolerance (or as low as reasonably achievable) and the subsequent ranking

BSBWOR201A Manage personal stress in the workplace

Modification History

Release	Comments
Release 2	New release of this Qualification released with version 6 of BSB07 Business Services Training Package. Outdated advice removed

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to manage personal stress in a customer contact environment.

Application of the Unit

This unit requires an awareness of sources of personal stress, the development of strategies to effectively manage stress, time management and recovery from stressful contacts or situations. This particularly applies in a contact centre environment due to the very measured, structured, high volume and potentially repetitive nature of the work but could apply in any work environment.

Competence in this unit requires resilience and self management of the stress that can be encountered in a customer contact environment.

This work is undertaken with some guidance and supervision.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Difficult situations may include:	• changing regulations and legislation • customer abuse • customer complaint • high number of customer contacts • sensitive customer situations • unreliable technology
Stress management techniques may include:	• debriefing with peers and/or line manager • relaxation methods • specific training • stretching and exercises • taking breaks

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

KPIs may include:	• call rates • compliance with schedules (adherence) • customer satisfaction results • performance measures • quality assurance ratings • sales targets • targets
Time management tools and techniques may include:	• diary and/or schedule • organising information • prioritisation of tasks • self-management of training requirements
Sources of fatigue may include:	• ergonomic factors • excessive overtime • external issues • overload of information • repetitive tasks and/or contacts • shift rostering and hours of work

Stamina management strategies may include:	• management of personal wellbeing, for example:
	  • breaks
	  • hydration
	  • life balance
	  • meals
	  • recognising fatigue
	• management of the environment, for example:
	  • ergonomics
	  • climate
	  • noise

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements define the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.

The Performance Criteria specify the level of performance required to demonstrate achievement of the Element. Terms in italics are elaborated in the Range Statement.

Elements and Performance Criteria

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Identify information requirements	1.1 Identify information requirements in relation to organisation and worker goals, objectives and expected outcomes 1.2 Collect, analyse and prepare data on information needs in ways to inform decision-making
2. Review options for systems to obtain information	2.1 Identify and periodically evaluate sources of information 2.2 Identify, evaluate and prepare options for information systems so users can contribute to their development 2.3 Identify and evaluate financial and technological resources required for systems
3. Establish and manage systems to record and store information	3.1 Periodically re-evaluate methods used to record and store information for effectiveness, efficiency, security and integrity and introduce new methods as necessary 3.2 Analyse any substantial breakdowns in methods of recording, storing and accessing information for cause and effect, and take corrective action 3.3 Establish and implement systems to ensure availability of information especially for direct use of clients 3.4 Monitor validity and usefulness of information and take appropriate actions for disposal or storage

4. Support and supervise the development of information and educational resources	4.1 Develop content and format guidelines in consultation with clients and other stakeholders, to guide production of education and information resources 4.2 Recruit appropriate expertise to develop designated information and education resources 4.3 Establish opportunities for information users to monitor and advise on ongoing development of information and education resources
5. Provide staff training	5.1 Determine staff training needs in relation to systems for information acquisition, recording and storage, and for preparing educational resources 5.2 Organise training or retraining in accordance with the units of competency required, training needs analysis and organisation policy

This describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level required for this unit.

Essential knowledge:

The candidate must be able to demonstrate essential knowledge required to effectively do the task outlined in elements and performance criteria of this unit, manage the task and manage contingencies in the context of the identified work role

These include knowledge of:

- Application of information technology
- Workload analysis models/systems
- Operations of the agency
- Relevant policy and procedures and work systems
- Systems analysis models/theories

- Relevant legislation relating to organisation and statutory information requirements
- Range of current and emerging information technology relevant to addressing organisation information requirements
- Consultation processes and techniques
- Communication dissemination models

Essential skills:

It is critical that the candidate demonstrate the ability to:

- Assess information requirements for an organisation or department
- Design work systems that integrate technology and address organisation and statutory information requirements
- Design training processes to support introduction of new technology in work practices
- Demonstrate knowledge of applicable agency and legislative requirements processes listed in the Range Statement

In addition, the candidate must be able to effectively do the task outlined in elements and performance criteria of this unit, manage the task and manage contingencies in the context of the identified work role

These include the ability to:

- Demonstrate application of skills in:
  - assessment of information needs
  - analysis
  - planning
  - consultation/facilitation
  - report writing
  - running reviews
  - accessing/researching current emerging technology
  - marketing technology
  - communication/dissemination strategies
- Utilise relevant information technology effectively in line with work health and safety (WHS) guidelines

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the Performance Criteria, Required Skills and Knowledge, the Range Statement and the Assessment Guidelines for this Training Package.

Critical aspects for assessment	• The individual being assessed must provide evidence of specified essential knowledge as well as skills

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

- accountability and recording
- ethics and fair dealing
- open and effective competition
- planning and professionalism
- value for money
- limitations of work role, responsibility and professional abilities
- organisation's policies and procedures for employment and tendering of services and procurement
- relevant Australian standards
- relevant federal and state or territory legislation and local government regulations related to:
  - anti-discrimination
  - consumer protection
  - environmental issues
  - equal employment opportunity (EEO)
  - financial probity
  - franchise and business structures
  - industrial relations
  - OHS
  - property sales, leasing and management
- tendering and contracting processes, including a range of contractual arrangements
- user needs and requirements for facilities
- whole of life costing and price-quality relationship issues.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, the range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for this Training Package.

Overview of assessment	This unit of competency could be assessed through practical demonstration of implementing and monitoring purchasing processes for goods and services. Targeted written (including alternative formats where necessary) or verbal questioning to assess the candidate's underpinning knowledge would provide additional supporting evidence of competence. The demonstration and questioning would include collecting evidence of the candidate's knowledge and application of ethical standards and relevant federal, and state or territory legislation and regulations. This assessment may be carried out in a simulated or workplace environment.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit

A person who demonstrates competency in this unit must be able to provide evidence of:

- accurately reviewing procurement objectives and relevant information to determine procurement processes, and sourcing appropriate authority or delegations for procurement
- finalising procurement process within agreed timeframes and using business equipment and technology to maintain records and reports
- knowledge of organisation's practices, ethical standards and legislative requirements associated with implementing and monitoring purchasing processes for goods and services
- using communication to monitor effectively the implementation of the procurement process against budget parameters.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

Resource implications for assessment include:

- access to suitable simulated or real opportunities and resources to demonstrate competence
- assessment instruments that may include personal planner and assessment record book
- access to a registered provider of assessment services.

Where applicable, physical resources should include equipment modified for people with disabilities.

Access must be provided to appropriate learning and/or assessment support when required.

Assessment processes and techniques must be culturally appropriate, and appropriate to the language and literacy capacity of the candidate and the work being performed.

Validity and sufficiency of evidence require that:

- competency will need to be demonstrated over a period of time reflecting the scope of the role and the practical requirements of the workplace
- where the assessment is part of a structured learning experience the evidence collected must relate to a number of performances assessed at different points in time and separated by further learning and practice with a decision of competence only taken at the point when the assessor has complete confidence in the person's

competence

- all assessment that is part of a structured learning experience must include a combination of direct, indirect and supplementary evidence
- where assessment is for the purpose of recognition (RCC/RPL), the evidence provided will need to be current and show that it represents competency demonstrated over a period of time
- assessment can be through simulated project-based activity and must include evidence relating to each of the elements in this unit.

In all cases where practical assessment is used it will be combined with targeted questioning to assess the underpinning knowledge. Questioning will be undertaken in such a manner as is appropriate to the language and literacy levels of the candidate and any cultural issues that may affect responses to the questions, and will reflect the requirements of the competency and the work being performed.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording in the performance criteria is detailed below. Add any essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts.

CPPWMT3044A Identify wastes and hazards

Modification History

Revised unit

Unit updated and equivalent to PRMWM44B Identify wastes and hazards

Unit Descriptor

This unit of competency specifies the outcomes required to identify a range of wastes and potential hazards and risks that may be present in the work environment.

Application of the Unit

This unit of competency supports individuals with responsibilities for identifying wastes and potential hazards and risks in a team environment. It includes following direction, systems and plans, as well as recognising the need for expert advice.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Pre-Requisites

Not applicable.

Employability Skills Information

This unit contains employability skills.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1	Identify waste.	1.1	Waste characteristics are identified.
		1.2	Types of wastes are differentiated by waste stream or waste categories.
		1.3	Hazardous and dangerous waste and non-conforming waste are detailed.
		1.4	Contaminants present in waste are noted.
		1.5	Further information on waste is obtained by questioning appropriate personnel to ensure correct identification.
2	Identify hazards and risks.	2.1	Other potential hazards and risks present in work environment are listed.
		2.2	Supervisor and team members are informed of job requirements, hazards and risks.
		2.3	Safe work practices that prevent risk behaviour are outlined to supervisor.
		2.4	Emergency response procedures are practised with team members.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- analytical skills to:
  - identify hazards and risks
  - identify waste types and waste non-conformances
  - segregate valuable resources in composite materials
  - segregate waste types, including potentially hazardous waste
- interpersonal skills to work in a team environment
- literacy skills to:
  - list potential hazards and risks
  - document and keep records

    - read and interpret:
        - emergency requirements
        - hazard advice
        - job sheets
        - work requirements and material safety data sheets (MSDS)
- oral communication skills to:
    - follow instructions
    - provide information
    - ask questions
- self-management skills to:
    - apply signalling techniques
    - conduct work practices safely and efficiently
    - plan and undertake routine tasks
    - prioritise duties
    - use emergency and personal protective equipment (PPE)

Required knowledge

- identification of:
    - waste contaminants
    - waste monitoring procedures
    - waste non-conformances
    - waste non-conformance handling procedures
    - waste types
    - waste management options
    - waste storage requirements
    - waste disposal and recovery routes
- procedures for containing segregated waste types, including containment and isolation of hazardous waste
- emergency response procedures relating to:
    - confined space procedures
    - duty of care
    - identification of work areas, including location of:
        - alarms
        - emergency equipment
        - communications equipment
    - coding systems
    - environmental agencies
    - environmental regulations

  - waste containment methods and isolation of emergencies
- occupational health and safety (OHS) requirements relating to:
  - chemical storage and decanting
  - dangerous goods and hazardous substances
  - OHS hierarchy of control
  - basic first aid appropriate to likely hazards and risks in work environment
- potential hazards and risks relating to:
  - dangerous goods
  - potential incidents

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment	This unit of competency could be assessed by observation of practical demonstration in the workplace or in a simulated environment.
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	A person who demonstrates competency in this unit must be able to provide evidence of the required skills and knowledge specified in this unit. In particular the person should demonstrate the ability to: • identify a range of waste streams, hazardous wastes and waste contaminants • identify a range of potential hazards and risks present in the workplace • observe OHS requirements.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment of essential underpinning knowledge may be conducted in an off-site context. It is to comply with relevant regulatory or Australian standards' requirements. Resource implications for assessment include: • work plans and approved specifications • forms and procedures manuals.
Method of assessment	The process of identifying waste and hazards must meet industry expectations. If the environment is narrowly defined or is not representative of industry needs, it may be necessary to refer to portfolio case studies to assess competency in the identification of waste and hazards. Assessment methods must: • satisfy the endorsed Assessment Guidelines of the Property Services Training Package • include direct observation of tasks in real or simulated work conditions, with questioning to confirm the ability to consistently identify and correctly interpret the essential underpinning knowledge required for practical application • reinforce the integration of employability skills with workplace tasks and job roles • confirm that competency is verified and able to be transferred to other circumstances and environments.

Guidance information for assessment	Reasonable adjustments for people with disabilities must be made to assessment processes where required. This could include access to modified equipment and other physical resources, and the provision of appropriate assessment support. Assessment processes and techniques should as far as is practical take into account the language, literacy and numeracy capacity of the candidate in relation to the competency being assessed. This unit could be assessed on its own or in combination with other units of competency relevant to the job function, for example: • CPPWMT3005A Identify and segregate waste • CPPWMT3014A Manually sort waste.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Waste characteristics may include:	• density • level of contamination • quality • shape • size • volume • weight.
Waste stream may include:	• construction and demolition • dangerous goods

	• green waste • hazardous substances • municipal waste.
Waste categories may include:	• solid (non-hazardous), e.g. construction and demolition • liquid (non-hazardous), e.g. chemical and aqueous • hazardous – regulated, prescribed, quarantined, medical and clinical • recoverable resources, e.g. recyclable and green waste.
Hazardous and dangerous waste may include:	• all waste depending on the condition, environment and personal exposure • biological products • blood products • chemicals • electrical wiring • glass • hospital waste • leaking containers • medical waste • needles and syringes • oil and petrol.
Non-conforming waste may include:	• contamination • hazardous or dangerous waste • inferior quality and unacceptable waste streams.
Contaminants may include:	• sunlight • infestation • mixing waste types • rot or mould • waterlogging.
Other potential hazards and risks are those that may lead to:	• damage to plant, vehicle or property • harm to the environment • illness or injury to employees, contractors or the public • injuries resulting from manual handling and repetitive work.
Hazards and risks may include:	• broken glass • compaction equipment • contamination • dust • fire • hazardous waste (e.g. sharps) • narrow driveways • other vehicles and equipment • overhanging signs

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to write content for a range of media. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	The person applying the skills and knowledge outlined in this unit could be expected to write both original and re-purposed non-narrative content for a range of media. The content could include such things as information for websites; community, news and promotional announcements for radio stations; organisation newsletters and audio or visual presentations. In larger organisations or in the development of e-learning resources, the person would usually be re-purposing material written by other writers or content experts. This work is usually undertaken with some supervision and guidance. The writing of narrative content is covered in: • CUFWRT302A Write simple stories.

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication, teamwork and literacy skills sufficient to:
  - interpret and clarify written or verbal instructions
  - write content in a style appropriate to target users and audience
  - communicate information to specific audiences
  - structure text-based content effectively for target audiences and delivery format
  - work collaboratively in a team environment - both independently on assignment and under direction
  - respond positively to constructive feedback
- conceptual skills sufficient to generate a range of text-based content ideas in response to a brief
- technical skills sufficient to:
  - proficiently use word processing tools
  - check and proofread written content using manual and automated systems
- self-management and planning skills sufficient to:
  - prioritise work tasks
  - source information and reference material in a timely fashion
  - meet deadlines
  - seek expert assistance when problems arise

Required knowledge

- industry knowledge, including:
  - roles and responsibilities of project team members
  - issues and challenges that arise when writing content
- understanding the way readers scan and read written material
- writing and communication principles for the relevant medium
- writing and presentation techniques for the relevant medium
- sound knowledge of grammar and punctuation
- media laws sufficient to identify defamation and obscenity and seek expert advice on issues that could lead to legal action
- copyright clearance procedures
- OHS as it relates to working for periods of time on computers

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential: • application of the principles of writing and communication to content written for a range of purposes • content written in a way that engages the target audience • sound knowledge of grammar and punctuation • collaborative approach to work • ability to work under pressure and meet deadlines.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure:
	• practical demonstration of skills by writing a range of content within timeframes typical in an industry context
	• access to:
	  • word processing software
	  • variety of information sources
	• access to appropriate learning and assessment support when required
	• use of culturally appropriate processes and techniques appropriate to the language and literacy capacity of learners and the work being performed.

Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct questioning combined with review of portfolios of evidence and third-party workplace reports of on-the-job performance • evaluation of content written by the candidate in response to a range of briefs • written or oral questioning to test knowledge as listed in the required skills and knowledge section of this unit.

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to write simple stories. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	People with the skills outlined in this unit are able to use both linear and non-linear structures to write simple stories. They could be writing stories for a wide range of products, e.g. interactive media, animations, e-learning resources and the print media. They would typically be writing stories in response to a clearly-defined brief under the supervision of a senior writer or editor. Stories would be short, e.g. a story for one or two animated objects, a dialogue between characters in a learning resource, or a creative piece for a magazine. Skills associated with writing more complex stories are covered in: • CUFWRT402A Write extended stories.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to edit written material. People in editorial roles refine and amend text to enhance the clarity of written communication. They may also be involved in making decisions about the placement of visual material in relation to text. When editing text, they take into account the needs of the readership, the author's intention, available resources and the type of publication. A thorough knowledge of grammar, syntax, spelling and punctuation is essential, along with an eye for detail and a systematic approach to work. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This unit covers the role of editors or subeditors working in contexts such as book publishing, magazines and journals, corporate, online media, government and not-for-profit organisations. It also covers the role of freelance editors. Even though people in this role work with a fair degree of autonomy, they report to a manager or, in the case of freelance editors, to a client.

EVIDENCE GUIDE
Overview of assessment

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the following is essential:
	• examples of edited written material that:
	  • demonstrate correct application of grammatical and punctuation conventions
	  • are free of spelling errors
	  • are coherent and clear to read
	  • are presented in a format appropriate to the stipulated audience and purpose
	• ability to work to deadlines
	• collaborative approach to work
	• attention to detail.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • access to a computer and the internet • access to a range of information, publication and communications material sources as listed in the range statement • provision of workplace sample documents or workplace-oriented simulation case studies or scenarios • access to appropriate learning and assessment support when required • use of culturally appropriate processes and techniques appropriate to the language and literacy capacity of learners and the work being performed.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • evaluation of a range of written material edited by the candidate, which involves comparing the original and final edited copy • case studies and problem-solving exercises to determine ability to correctly apply grammatical and punctuation conventions • written or oral questioning to test knowledge of principles for writing and editing in plain English • written or oral questioning to test knowledge as listed in the required skills and knowledge section of this unit • review of portfolios of evidence and third-party

CUFWRT402A Write extended stories

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to write extended stories. It builds on the skills covered in: • CUFWRT302A Write simple stories. No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	People with the skills outlined in this unit are able to write extended stories in a range of contexts using appropriate structures and creative narrative development techniques. They could, for example, be writing stories for the print media, television, radio, animations, e-learning resources, games, and fiction or non-fiction projects. They are typically writing stories in response to creative conceptualisations or project briefs, which could be self-generated or developed by others. Examples of extended stories include fully developed non-linear stories for animations or games, learning resources with complex learning and assessment approaches, extended creative responses such as novels or novellas, and non-fiction projects such as biographies.

	4.3 Participate in debriefing/evaluation to improve future response and address individual needs

Required Skills and Knowledge

This describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level required for this unit.

Essential knowledge:

The candidate must be able to demonstrate essential knowledge required to effectively do the task outlined in elements and performance criteria of this unit, manage the task and manage contingencies in the context of the identified work role

This includes a demonstrated understanding of:

- Awareness of stress management techniques and available support
- First aid management, based on a risk assessment relevant to the workplace or community setting of:
  - abdominal injuries
  - allergic reactions
  - altered and loss of consciousness
  - asthma
  - anaphylaxis
  - bleeding
  - burns – thermal, chemical, friction, electrical
  - cardiac arrest
  - chest pain
  - choking/airway obstruction
  - drowning
  - envenomation – snake, spider, insect and marine bites and stings
  - environmental impact such as hypothermia, hyperthermia, dehydration, heat stroke
  - injuries- cold and crush injuries; eye and ear injuries; head, neck and spinal injuries; minor skin injuries; needle stick injuries; soft tissue injuries including sprains, strains, dislocations, fractures
  - medical conditions, including cardiac conditions, epilepsy, diabetes, asthma and other respiratory conditions
  - poisoning and toxic substances (including chemical contamination)
  - respiratory distress

  - seizures
  - shock
  - stroke
  - substance misuse – common drugs and alcohol, including illicit drugs
  - unconsciousness, not breathing or not breathing normally
- Guidelines for provision of first aid as outlined in Australian Resuscitation Council (ARC) Guidelines and guidelines of Australian national peak clinical bodies and State / Territory legislation and regulations
- Social / legal issues including:
  - duty of care
  - confidentiality
  - importance of debriefing
  - need to be culturally aware, sensitive and respectful
  - own skills and limitations
- Understanding of:
  - basic work health and safety requirements in the provision of first aid
  - basic principles and concepts underlying the practice of first aid
  - chain of survival
  - infection control principles and procedures, including use of standard precautions
  - priorities of management in first aid when dealing with life threatening conditions
  - procedures for dealing with major and minor injury and illness
- Understanding of the use of an Automated External Defibrillator (AED), including when to use and when not to
- Understanding the causes of asphyxia due to body position

Essential skills:

It is critical that the candidate demonstrate the ability to effectively do the task outlined in elements and performance criteria of this unit, manage the task and manage contingencies in the context of the identified work role

This includes the ability to:

- Apply first aid principles
- Call an ambulance and/or medical assistance according to relevant circumstances and report casualty(s) condition
- Communicate effectively and assertively in an incident
- Conduct an initial casualty assessment
- Management of:
  - Anaphylaxis using adrenalin auto-injector
  - Avoiding asphyxia due to body position
  - Bronchospasm using bronchodilator and spacer device
  - Cardiac arrest using single rescuer procedure, including the demonstration of a seamless changeover between operators

  - External haemorrhage
  - Fractures, sprains and strains using arm slings, roller bandages and other appropriate immobilisation techniques
  - Unconscious casualty including using a recovery position
- Demonstrate:
  - ability to call an ambulance
  - consideration of the welfare of the casualty
  - safe manual handling
  - site management to prevent further injury
  - understanding of causes contributing to asphyxia due to body position
- Demonstrate correct procedures for performing CPR using a manikin, including standard precautions (i.e. as per unit HLTCPR211A Perform CPR)
- Demonstrate infection control, including use of standard precautions
- Evaluate own response and identify appropriate improvements where required
- Follow State and Territory work health and safety legislative requirements
- Make prompt and appropriate decisions relating to managing an incident in the workplace
- Plan an appropriate first aid response in line with established first aid principles, ARC Guidelines and guidelines of Australian national peak clinical bodies, industry standards and State / Territory legislation and regulations and respond to contingencies in line with own skills
- Prepare a written incident report or provide information to enable preparation of an incident report
- Provide assistance with self-medication as per subject's own medication regime and/or administer medication in line with State/Territory legislation and regulations, organisation policies and any available medical/pharmaceutical instructions
- Unpack, activate and follow prompts of an AED

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the Performance Criteria, Required Skills and Knowledge, the Range Statement and the Assessment Guidelines for this Training Package. The evidence guide supplements assessment requirements that apply to all units in this Training Package. Users of this evidence guide should first read the package's assessment guidelines.

Critical aspects of assessment:

- The individual being assessed must provide evidence of essential knowledge and essential skills
- Competence should be demonstrated working individually and as part of a first aid team
- Consistency of performance should be demonstrated over the required range of situations relevant to the

Range Statement

The Range Statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Add any essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts.

Contextualisation to address specific requirements may include:	• First aid provision under specific constraints or circumstances (e.g. in confined spaces, in maritime work environment or in work environment involving identified risks/hazards) • Focus on first aid management of specific types of injury

Established first aid principles and procedures include:	• Australian Resuscitation Council Guidelines
	• Guidelines of Australian national peak clinical bodies
	• Primary First Aid Principles to:
	  • Preserve life
	  • Prevent illness, injury and condition(s) becoming worse
	  • Promote recovery
	  • Protect the unconscious casualty
	• State/Territory legislation and regulations

Hazards may include:	• A source or situation with the potential for harm in terms of human injury or ill-health, damage to property, the environment, or a combination of these
	• Relevant hazards may be classified under the headings:
	  • Biological hazards
	  • Chemical hazards
	  • Hazards associated with manual handling Physical hazards

Risks may include:	• Environmental risks • Exposure to blood and other body substances • Risks associated with the proximity of other workers and bystanders • Risks from body position • Risks from equipment, machinery and substances • Risks from vehicles • Risks from first aid equipment • Risk of further injury to the casualty
Casualty's condition is managed for:	• Abdominal injuries • Airway obstruction • Allergic reactions

- Altered and loss of consciousness
- Bleeding
- Body position
- Burns – thermal, chemical, friction, electrical
- Cardiac arrest
- Chest pain
- Choking/airway obstruction
- Drowning
- Envenomation – snake, spider, insect and marine bites and stings
- Environmental impact such as hypothermia, hyperthermia, dehydration, heat stroke
- Injuries: cold and crush injuries; eye and ear injuries; head, neck and spinal injuries; minor skin injuries; needle stick injuries; soft tissue injuries including sprains, strains, dislocations, fractures
- Medical conditions, including cardiac conditions, epilepsy, diabetes, asthma and other respiratory conditions
- Poisoning and toxic substances (including chemical contamination)
- Respiratory distress
- Seizures
- Shock
- Stroke
- Substance misuse – common drugs and alcohol, including illicit drugs
- Unconsciousness, not breathing or not breathing normally

First aid management must take into account:

- Infection control
- Legal and social responsibilities of first aider
- The setting in which first aid is provided, including:
  - industry/site specific regulations, codes etc.
  - location and nature of the incident
  - location of emergency services personnel situational risks associated with, for example, electrical and biological hazards, weather, motor vehicle accidents
  - State and Territory work health and safety legislative requirements
  - workplace policies and procedures
  - WHS requirements
- The use and availability of first aid equipment and

- literacy skills to:
  - compose email messages
  - interpret user manuals and help functions
  - read and interpret basic online documents
  - read and write basic workplace documents
- problem-solving skills to address common operational problems when using web browsers
- research skills to locate varied sources of information online
- technical skills to use:
  - digital device
  - email applications
  - internet search functions
  - peripheral hardware
  - keyboard to enter text into web browsers and email applications.

Required knowledge

- basic technical terminology related to reading help files and prompts
- basic knowledge of copyright and privacy statements
- different types of messages that occur, such as:
  - error messages
  - message to install plug-ins
- different types of search engines
- procedures for using email applications
- procedures for evaluating and assessing the authority, reliability and authenticity of information
- internet search functions
- internet speed, traffic loads related to times of accessing the internet
- internet web browsers
- makeup and structure of internet addresses
- organisational guidelines on internet and email use (web etiquette or netiquette)
- different internet search techniques
- web browser update techniques
- use of key words and bookmarks.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the ability to: • connect to and access the internet • send and receive emails • secure internet access and email communications • use search tools to locate information • research and select appropriate website • undertake online interactions • make an informed assessment of the accuracy, currency, authority and reliability of the site and information located.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • use of PC or digital device with internet • search engines currently used in industry • organisational policies on internet usage • appropriate learning and assessment support when required. Where applicable, physical resources should include equipment modified for people with special needs.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • verbal or written questioning to assess candidate's knowledge of internet access requirements, email features and search engine attributes • direct observation of candidate accessing the internet, using email, and searching and interacting with consumer sites using advanced search features • direct observation of candidate undertaking online interactions • review of search results, including assessment of the accuracy, currency and reliability of the site and information located.
Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, where appropriate. Assessment processes and techniques must be culturally appropriate, and suitable to the communication skill level, language, literacy and numeracy capacity of the candidate and the work being performed. Indigenous people and other people from a non-English speaking background may need additional support. In cases where practical assessment is used it should be combined with targeted questioning to assess required knowledge.

ICAICT203A Operate application software packages

Modification History

Version	Comments
ICAICT203A	This version first released with ICA11 Information and Communications Technology Training Package version 1.0

Unit Descriptor

This unit describes the performance outcomes, skills and knowledge required to identify, select and operate three commercial software packages, including a word-processing and a spreadsheet application package.

The unit identifies the requirement to use a word-processing, spreadsheet and third software application package to ensure that the individual develops the skills required to cover a range of basic office software requirements.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to information and communications technology (ICT) personnel who need to use several different software applications to produce diverse documents within a small to large office environment.

The ability to use and present a variety of key software application packages is a key component of any ICT business or office environment.

Licensing/Regulatory Information

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement but users should confirm requirements with the relevant federal, state or territory authority.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to:
  - communicate with peers and supervisors
  - seek assistance and expert advice
- literacy skills to:
  - interpret user manuals and help functions
  - read and write basic workplace documents
- numeracy skills to enter simple formulas into spreadsheet
- problem-solving skills to manage applications and use help functions
- technical skills to:
  - operate a personal computer (PC) and printer
  - operate a keyboard to enter text and numerical data
  - use application software packages.

Required knowledge

- application software packages used by the organisation

- features and functions of commercial computing packages
- import and export software functions
- linking documents
- OHS principles and responsibilities for ergonomics, such as work periods and breaks
- purpose, use and functions of applications
- use of input and output devices.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the ability to: • produce workplace documents using a minimum of three different software application packages • open, amend and save files and documents according to organisational requirements • use OHS principles and responsibilities for ergonomics, such as work periods and breaks • use help manuals and online help.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • use of PC and printer • use of software currently used in industry • documents detailing organisational style guide and policy • documents or information containing data suitable for developing software application documents • appropriate learning and assessment when required. Where applicable, physical resources should include equipment modified for people with special needs.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • verbal or written questioning to assess candidate's knowledge of OHS, application usage for specific

1. Deliver support to ICT clients	1.1 Provide support for ICT clients in a courteous and professional manner according to organisational policy 1.2 Establish and confirm nature of client's ICT concerns using active listening and questioning 1.3 Maintain client contact and provide progress information until the problem is resolved
2. Respond to ICT client complaints	2.1 Respond to ICT clients concerns and issues demonstrating a positive, sensitive and helpful attitude 2.2 Escalate and refer client concerns to support person if required, explaining the nature of issues involved 2.3 Resolve ICT client complaint using recommendations from the support person 2.4 Document and record ICT client concerns and solutions, according to organisational guidelines
3. Evaluate received ICT client complaints	3.1 Analyse recent ICT register 3.2 Propose proactive training to appropriate person

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communications skills to:
  - establish and confirm nature of client concerns
  - liaise with clients and ICT support
  - respond to clients from diverse cultural and other backgrounds
- customer-service skills to provide support for clients in a courteous and professional manner

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- decision-making skills applied to a limited range of options
- problem-solving skills to resolve client complaints.

Required knowledge

- current industry-accepted hardware and software products, with broad knowledge of general features and capabilities
- general knowledge of the ICT client business domain and business-critical functions
- general knowledge of organisational systems and working environment
- organisational policies for external and internal client contact.

Evidence Guide

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of ability to: • provide routine ICT client support in a professional manner • refer client concerns to support person if required, according to escalation procedures • resolve client complaints • document and record client concerns and solutions, according to organisational guidelines.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure access to: • personal computer • relevant organisational guidelines • relevant documentation • site where routine ICT client support may be demonstrated • appropriate learning and assessment support when required. Where applicable, physical resources should include equipment modified for people with special needs.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples are appropriate for this unit: • direct observation of candidate interacting with and providing support for clients • direct observation of candidate escalating client concerns to support person • verbal or written questioning to assess candidate's knowledge of enterprise escalation procedures • review of documentation of client concerns and solutions.

Guidance information for assessment	Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, where appropriate. Assessment processes and techniques must be culturally appropriate, and suitable to the communication skill level, language, literacy and numeracy capacity of the candidate and the work being performed. Indigenous people and other people from a non-English speaking background may need additional support. In cases where practical assessment is used it should be combined with targeted questioning to assess required knowledge.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

ICT clients may include:	• external organisations • ICT administrators • ICT users • individuals • internal departments • vendors.
Support person may include:	• help-desk person • subject matter expert • supervisor • vendor business representative.
Organisational guidelines may include:	• access to software • communication methods • content of emails • dispute resolution • document procedures and templates

MSS015002A Develop strategies for more sustainable use of resources

Modification History

Not applicable.

Unit Descriptor

This unit of competency covers identifying strategies for more sustainable uses of resources. The unit includes the identification of waste as defined in lean manufacturing (muda) as part of a strategy for achieving better sustainability outcomes in a process as well as quantifying theoretical and actual resource (including energy) consumption.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies inside organisations and their value chains and specifically applies to the use of resources as part of an overall response to improving sustainability. The unit has been developed with manufacturing operations as a focus. However, because of the range of organisations in a typical manufacturing value chain it may also be applied to other types of organisations.

The unit assumes that a decision to attempt to achieve more sustainable use of resources has already been made. The unit covers the skills needed for developing a strategic approach to resource use at the organisation or value chain level.

The unit does not cover the technical skills required to implement specific initiatives that may be identified as part of the strategic plan. However, there is a requirement to present and organise data. The complexity of this requirement will vary according to the type and scale of the organisation's processes. Where required, appropriate mathematics and statistics units should be selected from the MEM05 Metal and Engineering Training Package or other appropriate Training Package.

Where the carbon footprint (or water footprint or similar) of an enterprise or value chain is known, the unit can be applied to developing strategies for the reduction of that footprint.

It would typically be undertaken by a manager or technical specialist who had a major responsibility for sustainability as part of a broader work role, or sustainability may be their primary work responsibility.

For specific techniques covering the auditing of water, energy, emissions and transport, refer to relevant sustainability audit units.

Required Skills and Knowledge

Required knowledge includes:

- the concept of muda. Muda is usually summarised under the headings of the 'seven wastes' which include:
  - overproduction
  - delay/waiting
  - transportation
  - over processing
  - excess inventory
  - unnecessary motion
  - defects and rework
- methods of material balancing
- methods of energy balancing
- methods of comparing theoretical with actual resource consumption
- methods for mapping manufacturing processes and resources consumed
- methods of measuring actual resource usage
- concept of muda and muda categories
- muda reduction methods and strategies
- AS/NZS ISO 14000 Environmental Management Standards

Required skills include:

- calculating, manipulating and interpreting numerical data, including establishing series, means and averages, absolute and proportional material and energy usage per product or process, correlations and rates of change
- analysing and conducting root cause analysis
- calculating theoretical consumption of resources as the minimum amount of resources per product or process step as defined by the customer multiplied by the rate of production or process
- calculating actual consumption of resources per unit (e.g. per product, operation, site or value chain)
- writing technical reports
- consulting with technical experts and internal and external stakeholders

Evidence Guide

Overview of assessment	A person who demonstrates competency in this unit must be able to identify and quantify resources and waste in a process, recommend strategies to reduce waste and prepare a report with recommendations.
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Assessors must be satisfied that the candidate can competently and consistently apply the skills covered in this unit of competency in new and different situations and contexts. Critical aspects of assessment and evidence include: • quantifying significant resource consumption and emission using materials balancing • identifying and consulting with stakeholders • developing strategies for reducing emissions • preparing and presenting a resources use report.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	• This unit of competency is to be assessed in the workplace or a simulated workplace environment. • Assessment should emphasise a workplace context and procedures found in the candidate's workplace. • This unit of competency may be assessed with other relevant units addressing sustainability at the enterprise level or other units requiring the exercise of the skills and knowledge covered by this unit. • The competencies covered by this unit would be demonstrated by an individual working alone or as part of a team.
Method of assessment	• In all cases, practical assessment should be supported by questions to assess underpinning knowledge and those aspects of competency which are difficult to assess directly. • Where applicable, reasonable adjustment must be made to work environments and training situations to accommodate ethnicity, age, gender, demographics and disability. • The language, literacy and numeracy demands of assessment should not be greater than those required to undertake the unit of competency in a work-like environment.

Range Statement

Waste	Waste in this unit is used in the broader sense of 'muda' as used in lean manufacturing and the competitive manufacturing units of competency developed by Manufacturing Skills Australia (MSA)

Emissions	Emissions means all materials which enter the process/site but which do not leave as part of the product and so includes:
	• known or able to be physically measured emissions of:
	  • gases, vapours and fumes
	  • liquids
	  • solids
	• assumed emissions through material balancing
	• assumed emissions through energy loss, including heat, friction and other energy conversion yield losses

Theoretical consumption	Theoretical consumption of resources is the minimum amount of resources per product as defined by the customer multiplied by the rate of production
Actual consumption	Actual consumption is the amount of a resource entering the value chain
Significant resources	Significant resources includes resources which are deemed to be significant because they are: • high volume • high value • high environmental significance • important to the product or process • covered by legislation or regulation • important to the enterprise It need not include resources which are incidental to the activity and which are not otherwise significant

Unit Descriptor

Unit descriptor	This competency covers the outcomes required to effectively analyse the workplace in relation to environmentally sustainable work practices and to implement improvements and monitor their effectiveness. This unit is based on the sustainability guideline standard GCSSUS02A Implement and monitor environmentally sustainable work practices.

Application of the Unit

Application of the unit	This competency applies to those who have responsibility for a specific area of work or who lead a work group or team. It addresses the knowledge, processes and techniques necessary to implement and monitor environmentally sustainable work practices, including the development of processes and tools. It includes: • Identifying areas for improvement • Developing plans to make improvements • Implementing and monitoring improvements in environmental performance. This competency applies to all sectors of the manufacturing industry and members of its value chain. It may also be applied to all sections of an organisation, including office, warehouse etc. This unit will need to be appropriately contextualised as it is applied across an organisation and across different industry sectors.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Investigate current practices in relation to resource usage.	1.1 Identify environmental regulations applying to the enterprise. 1.2 Assess procedures for assessing compliance with environmental regulations. 1.3 Collect information on environmental and resource efficiency systems and procedures, and provide to the work group where appropriate. 1.4 Measure and record current resource usage by members of the work group.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
	1.5 Analyse and record current purchasing strategies. 1.6 Analyse current work processes to access information and data and assist in identifying areas for improvement.
2. Set targets for improvements.	2.1 Seek input from stakeholders, key personnel and specialists. 2.2 Access external sources of information and data as required. 2.3 Evaluate alternative solutions to workplace environmental issues. 2.4 Set efficiency targets.
3. Implement performance improvement strategies.	3.1 Source techniques/tools to assist in achieving targets. 3.2 Apply continuous improvement strategies to own work area of responsibility and communicate ideas and possible solutions to the work group and management. 3.3 Integrate environmental and resource efficiency improvement plans for own work group with other operational activities and implement them. 3.4 Seek suggestions and ideas about environmental and resource efficiency management from stakeholders and act upon them where appropriate. 3.5 Implement costing strategies to fully value environmental assets.
4. Monitor performance.	4.1 Document outcomes and communicate reports on targets to key personnel and stakeholders. 4.2 Evaluate strategies. 4.3 Set new targets and investigate and apply new tools and strategies. 4.4 Promote successful strategies and reward participants where possible.

Required Skills and Knowledge

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.
Required skills
Required skills include:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
• using relevant environmental and resource efficiency systems, tools and procedures • applying quality assurance systems relevant to own work area • applying relevant supply chain procedures • measurement and calculation techniques • communication/consultation skills to ensure information is supplied to the work group Reading and writing is required to comprehend documentation and interpret environmental and energy efficiency requirements and to document and maintain records Numeracy is required to interpret numeric workplace information, readings and measurements, handle data as required and complete numeric components of workplace forms/reports.
Required knowledge
Required knowledge includes: • how to access and use relevant environmental and resource efficiency systems, tools and procedures • understanding of best practice approaches relevant to own area of responsibility • strategies to maximise opportunities and minimise impacts relevant to own work area • relevant environmental and resource efficiency issues specific to industry practices • methods for measuring and calculating resource usage

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment	A person who demonstrates competence in this unit must be able to provide evidence of the ability to implement and monitor integrated environmental and resource efficiency management policies and procedures within an organisation.
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	It is essential that competence is demonstrated in the knowledge and skills defined in this unit. These may include the ability to:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

EVIDENCE GUIDE
	• monitor and investigate current resource usage • develop plans to improve sustainability • implement environmental improvements. Consistent performance should be demonstrated. For example, look to see that: • environmental performance is routinely monitored and investigated • areas for improvements are followed through and the implemented changes are in turn monitored and investigated.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	This section should be read in conjunction with the range of variables for this unit of competency. Assessors must be satisfied that the person can consistently perform the unit as a whole, as defined by the Elements, Performance Criteria and skills and knowledge. Resources required include suitable access to an operating plant or equipment that allows for appropriate and realistic simulation. A bank of case studies/scenarios and questions will also be required to the extent that they form part of the assessment method. Questioning may take place either in the workplace, or in an adjacent, quiet facility such as an office or lunchroom. No other special resources are required. Access must be provided to appropriate learning and/or assessment support when required. Where applicable, physical resources should include equipment modified for people with disabilities.
Method of assessment	A holistic approach should be taken to the assessment. Competence in this unit may be assessed: • by demonstration in the workplace • using targeted questioning for appropriate portions • through use of specific project(s) • by use of a suitable simulation and/or a range of case studies/scenarios • by a combination of these techniques. In all cases it is expected that practical assessment will be combined with targeted questioning to assess the underpinning knowledge and theoretical assessment will be combined with appropriate practical/simulation or similar assessment.

Guidance information for assessment	Assessors need to be aware of any cultural issues that may affect responses to questions. Assessment processes and techniques must be culturally appropriate and appropriate to the oracy, language and literacy capacity of the assessee and the work being performed.

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
Procedures	All operations are performed in accordance with procedures. Procedures include all relevant workplace procedures, work instructions, temporary instructions and relevant industry and government codes and standards. Where reference is made to industry codes of practice, and/or Australian/international standards, the latest version must be used.

Environmental and resource efficiency issues	Environmental and resource efficiency issues include:
	• addressing environmental and resource sustainability initiatives such as Environmental Management Systems, action plans, surveys and audits
	• reference to standards, guidelines and approaches such as:
	  • ISO 14001 Environmental Management Systems
	  • Life Cycle Analyses

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

RANGE STATEMENT
	• Cradle to cradle • Global Reporting Initiative • Ecological footprinting • Triple Bottom Line reporting • Product Stewardship • determining enterprise's most appropriate waste treatment including waste to landfill, recycling, re-use and wastewater treatment • applying the waste management hierarchy in the workplace • initiating and/or maintaining appropriate enterprise procedures for operational energy consumption, including stationary energy and non stationary (transport) • efficient use of water • minimising greenhouse gas emissions • use of controls to minimise the risk of environmental damage from hazardous substances
Measure	Measuring techniques include: • material fed to/consumed by plant/equipment • plant meters and gauges • job cards including kanbans • examination of invoices from suppliers • measurements made under different conditions • examination of relevant information and data • others as appropriate to the specific industry contexts.
Techniques and tools	Techniques and tools may includeÂ : • visual workplace concepts • measurement, display and/or recording devices • changed work practices/procedures • competence development and awareness training • process and equipment items
Compliance	Compliance includes meeting relevant federal, state and local government laws, by-laws, regulations and codes of practice.
Incidents	Incidents include:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

RANGE STATEMENT
	• breaches or potential breaches of regulations • occurrences outside of standard procedure which may lead to lower environmental performance
Purchasing strategies	Purchasing strategies include: • influencing suppliers to take up environmental sustainability • selecting materials/components with a lower environmental profile.
Stakeholders, key personnel and specialists	Stakeholders, key personnel and specialists include individuals and groups both inside and outside the organisation that have some direct interest in the enterprise's conduct, actions, products and services, including: • employees at all levels of the organisation • customers • suppliers • other organisations • key personnel within the organisation, and specialists outside it who may have particular technical expertise
Suggestions	Suggestions includes ideas that help to: • prevent and minimise environmental risks and maximise opportunities • reduce emissions of greenhouse gases • reduce use of non-renewable resources • make more efficient use of energy, water and other resources • maximise opportunities to re use and recycle materials • identify strategies to offset or mitigate environmental impacts. e.g. purchasing of carbon credits • express purchasing power through the selection of suppliers with improved environmental performance. e.g. purchasing renewable energy and materials with lower embedded carbon • eliminate the use of hazardous and toxic materials increasing the reusability/recyclability of wastes/products.

Unit Descriptor

This unit covers the competency required to identify and prevent the development of workplace emergency situations, or to minimise their consequences, and to report if emergency protection systems, emergency control equipment and evacuation systems are compromised.

For this unit the term workplace is defined as the area encompassed by an individual's responsibilities. All aspects of the unit must be undertaken in line with legislative requirements, workplace policies and procedures, and accepted safe practices.

This unit:

- has been developed to cover the broad range of emergencies and workplaces as considered in Australian Standard 37452002
- covers the work required before the emergency services or specialist response team arrives
- does not cover the specific use of equipment to prevent workplace emergency situations

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to employees in the workplace within all industries and in all contexts.

This unit places responsibility on individual employees in the workplace to identify, prevent and report potential workplace emergency situations. This requirement is consistent with the legislative obligations of employees as prescribed in OHS legislation. The unit may also be used for planning for future operations in the workplace.

The knowledge and skills gained through the completion of this unit may be applied by all employees across all industries.

	2.6 Workplace procedures and accepted safe practices are regularly monitored and followed to ensure operability of emergency protection systems, emergency control equipment and evacuation systems.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level, required for this unit.

Required Skills

- communicate effectively
- identify hazards in the workplace that reduce the effectiveness of emergency protection systems, emergency control equipment and evacuation systems
- monitor the work area to identify new and emerging risks on an on-going basis

Required Knowledge

- basic types, principles of operation and limitations of emergency protection systems and emergency control equipment typically installed in the workplace
- hazards in the workplace that reduce the effectiveness of emergency protection systems and emergency control equipment
- procedures for identifying, minimising or preventing, correcting and reporting situations within the organisation that may lead to workplace emergencies
- safe practices applicable to the workplace that help to prevent emergencies
- situations in the workplace that may lead to emergencies
- situations that may make emergency protection systems and emergency control equipment inoperable

Evidence Guide

Evidence Guide

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit

Assessment must confirm the ability to apply workplace procedures; to maintain own safety and the safety of others in emergency situations; and to follow workplace emergency procedures and the advice of emergency control organisation members.

Consistency in performance

Competency should be demonstrated over time with a range of emergencies that could be expected in the workplace including assisting people who may need assistance.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

Context of assessment

Competency should be assessed in the workplace or in a simulated workplace.

Specific resources for assessment

Access to:

- scenarios that reflect a range of emergency situations that may be expected in the workplace
- appropriate emergency resources
- range of communication equipment relevant to the workplace
- workplace emergency procedures and documentation

Range Statement

The Range Statement relates to the Unit of Competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording in the Performance Criteria is detailed below.

Emergency response exercises may include

- briefings
- debriefings
- emergency exercises, simulations and reviews
- table/desk top exercises

Emergency warnings may include

- audible/visual alarms
- audible or vibrating pagers
- coded or uncoded public address announcements
- e-mail
- screen alerts
- stench alarms

Unit Descriptor

This unit covers the requirement to contribute to conflict management in the workplace between self and others, such as staff or clients. It includes recognising the presence of conflict, dealing with emotions, overcoming barriers to communication, gathering the facts, agreeing on and implementing action. It does not include managing conflict between two other parties, formal negotiation, counselling or conducting mediation.

In practice, contributing to conflict management may overlap with other generalist or specialist public sector work activities such as acting ethically, complying with legislation, working effectively, working with diversity, using workplace communication strategies, etc.

This is one of 4 units of competency in the Working in Government and Human Resource Management Competency Fields that deal with conflict. Related units are:

- PSPGOV411A Deal with conflict
- PSPGOV508A Manage conflict
- PSPHR603B Provide advisory and mediation services
- No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of publication

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements are the essential outcomes of the unit of competency.	Together, performance criteria specify the requirements for competent performance. Text in bold italics is explained in the Range Statement following.

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Recognise the presence of conflict	1.1 Conflict situations and/or the potential for conflict are recognised and confirmed. 1.2 The signs, stages and causes of conflict are identified. 1.3 Conflict situations are avoided where appropriate, and assistance sought when necessary. 1.4 Records of actual/potential conflict are completed in accordance with organisational policy and procedures.
2. Deal with emotions	2.1 Own behaviour and feelings about the situation are reflected on. 2.2 Own emotions are recognised and managed. 2.3 The other party's emotions are acknowledged and dealt with in a manner that prevents escalation.
3. Overcome barriers to communication	3.1 Barriers to effective communication are identified. 3.2 Factors and issues relevant to the situation are identified, clarified and confirmed using appropriate communication techniques. 3.3 Third party support is sought if necessary in accordance with legislation, policy and procedures. 3.4 Social and cultural differences are taken into account in the communication style and approach taken.

- case studies and workplace scenarios to capture the range of situations likely to be encountered when contributing to conflict management

Where and how to assess evidence

Valid assessment of this unit requires:

- a workplace environment or one that closely resembles normal work practice and replicates the range of conditions likely to be encountered when contributing to conflict management, including coping with difficulties, irregularities and breakdowns in routine
- contribution to conflict management in a range of (3 or more) contexts (or occasions, over time)

Assessment methods should reflect workplace demands, such as literacy, and the needs of particular groups, such as:

- people with disabilities
- people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds
- Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people
- women
- young people
- older people
- people in rural and remote locations

Assessment methods suitable for valid and reliable assessment of this competency may include, but are not limited to, a combination of 2 or more of:

- case studies
- portfolios
- questioning
- scenarios
- simulation or role plays
- authenticated evidence from the workplace and/or training courses

For consistency of assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements are the essential outcomes of the unit of competency.

Together, performance criteria specify the requirements for competent performance. Text in bold italics is explained in the Range Statement following.

Elements and Performance Criteria

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Plan for negotiation	1.1 The purpose of the negotiation and the issue/s under consideration are clarified with affected personnel and through analysis of all related documentation/information.
	1.2 Primary needs and desired outcomes of all parties are identified.
	1.3 The organisation's position is determined in consultation with senior personnel, and a negotiating approach is devised based on an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the position.
	1.4 Information relating to the negotiation, including any precedents, is collected, analysed and organised to support the negotiating approach.
	1.5 Timeframe and logistics are agreed and a negotiation plan is developed in accordance with legislation, policy and procedures, and communicated to other staff, if any, involved in the negotiation team.
2. Conduct negotiation	2.1 The issue/s under consideration and the negotiation process to be used are agreed by all parties and documented in accordance with legislation, policy and procedures.
	2.2 Negotiating techniques are used to persuade the other party of the strength of the argument in favour of the organisation's position.
	2.3 The negotiation plan is modified if necessary to respond to contingencies.
	2.4 Techniques for dealing with conflict or deadlocks are selected and used in accordance with the negotiation plan and the progress of the negotiation.
	2.5 Options for resolving the issue are discussed and the acceptability of these to the parties is determined.
3. Finalise negotiation outcomes	3.1 An agreed conclusion is reached, documented and signed-off by the parties.
	3.2 Negotiation outcomes are reported in accordance with organisational policy and procedures and stakeholders are

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements are the essential outcomes of the unit of competency.

Together, performance criteria specify the requirements for competent performance. Text in bold italics is explained in the Range Statement following.

Elements and Performance Criteria

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Identify legislative requirements	1.1 Information is accessed that covers the range of legislation and guidelines relating to the workplace and is current and comprehensive. 1.2 Key requirements of relevant pieces of legislation are identified and confirmed with senior staff. 1.3 Requirements of legislation are clarified to confirm understanding and ensure consistency of interpretation and application. 1.4 Clarification is obtained of the way various pieces of legislation are integrated to provide a legislative framework for public sector work. 1.5 Advice is obtained when apparently conflicting legislative directives are found.
2. Comply with legislative requirements	2.1 Work practices are carried out in accordance with the requirements of legislation relating to the work environment. 2.2 Own conduct is reviewed and feedback from others is used to confirm continuing compliance with legislative requirements.
3. Report incidents of non-compliance	3.1 Possible breaches of legislation are raised promptly with an authorised person/body in accordance with organisational procedures. 3.2 Inadequacies in workplace procedures which may contribute to non-compliance are raised in accordance with organisational procedures.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level, required for this unit.

Skill requirements

Look for evidence that confirms skills in:

- undertaking research and evaluation
- undertaking self-assessment
- reading complex and formal documents such as legislation and related materials to apply them to work practices and to identify inappropriate conduct
- communicating with others involving exchanges of complex oral and written information
- using technology to access legislative requirements
- responding to diversity, including gender and disability
- applying environmental and occupational health and safety procedures

Knowledge requirements

Look for evidence that confirms knowledge and understanding of:

- the range of legislation relating to the public sector (including occupational health and safety and environment) and the key requirements of each
- public sector codes of ethics/conduct
- equal employment opportunity, equity and diversity principles
- organisational processes/procedures for responding to legislative issues

Evidence Guide

The Evidence Guide specifies the evidence required to demonstrate achievement in the unit of competency as a whole. It must be read in conjunction with the Unit descriptor, Performance Criteria, the Range Statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Public Sector Training Package.

Units to be assessed together

Overview of evidence requirements

In addition to integrated demonstration of the elements and their related performance criteria, look for evidence that confirms:

- the knowledge requirements of this unit
- the skill requirements of this unit
- application of Employability Skills as they relate to this unit
- compliance with legislation in a range of (3 or more) contexts (or occasions, over time)

Resources required to carry out assessment

These resources include:

- public sector legislation, regulations and guidelines
- procedures and protocols
- scenarios and case studies to capture the range of situations likely to be encountered when complying with public sector legislation

Where and how to assess evidence

Valid assessment of this unit requires:

- a workplace environment or one that closely resembles normal work practice and replicates the range of conditions likely to be encountered when complying with legislation in the public sector, including coping with difficulties, irregularities and apparently conflicting legislative requirements
- compliance with legislation in a range of (3 or more) contexts (or occasions, over time).

Assessment methods should reflect workplace demands, such as literacy, and the needs of particular groups, such as:

- people with disabilities
- people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds
- Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people
- women
- young people
- older people
- people in rural and remote locations.

Assessment methods suitable for valid and reliable assessment of this competency may include, but are not limited to, a combination of 2 or more of:

- case studies
- portfolios
- questioning

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- scenarios
- simulation or role plays
- authenticated evidence from the workplace and/or training courses

For consistency of assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments

Range Statement

The Range Statement provides information about the context in which the unit of competency is carried out. The variables cater for differences between States and Territories and the Commonwealth, and between organisations and workplaces. They allow for different work requirements, work practices and knowledge. The Range Statement also provides a focus for assessment. It relates to the unit as a whole. Unit Descriptor

This unit covers management of generally low risk projects that may be small scale and managed by one person or a person with a small team. It includes implementing project start-up activities, coordinating project implementation, monitoring the project and arranging follow-up activities. Contract management requirements are not included as this aspect is addressed by units of competency within the Competency field of Procurement and Contract Management.

In practice, managing simple projects overlaps with other generalist and specialist work activities such as applying government processes, using resources, gathering information, managing contracts etc.

This unit, and unit PSPPM405A Administer simple projects, are mutually exclusive. One or the other, but not both, may contribute to a qualification.

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of publication

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements are the essential outcomes of the unit of competency.	Together, performance criteria specify the requirements for competent performance. Text in bold italics is explained in the Range Statement following.

1. Implement start-up activities	1.1 The project plan is updated with confirmed information for key dates and activities, resources and project governance details in accordance with the project implementation strategy. 1.2 Project stakeholders' understanding of and agreement to fulfil the project requirements and their roles and responsibilities are confirmed. 1.3 Required systems are established and maintained throughout the project in accordance with the project plan. 1.4 A working knowledge of project management tools is used to facilitate integration of project activities and achievement of project outcomes.
2. Coordinate project implementation	2.1 Integration and management of project activities are handled in accordance with the project plan. 2.2 Stakeholder input and expectations are managed and their commitment is maintained throughout the life of the project in accordance with organisational policy and procedures and the project plan. 2.3 Disagreements and disputes are resolved or referred to a higher authority in accordance with organisational policy and procedures. 2.4 Project change proposals are received and changes are recommended/made in accordance with the project plan, and documented in accordance with policy and procedures.
3. Monitor project	3.1 All aspects of the project are continually monitored and corrective action is taken as necessary to maintain progress in accordance with the project plan.

	3.2 Consultation and reporting mechanisms are applied in accordance with the communication plan when dealing with management, staff and/or contractors, steering committee members or other stakeholders.
	3.3 Project governance plans and any related contracts are monitored, reviewed and amended as appropriate, and results are reported in accordance with the communication plan.
	3.4 Project progress is monitored against agreed milestones in accordance with the project plan to provide a measure of performance throughout the life of the contract.
	3.5 Programmed review of objectives and achievement is implemented in accordance with the project plan.
4. Arrange project follow-up activities	4.1 Project deliverables are analysed against specifications, performance standards and project objectives, under broad guidance, and the results are reported to stakeholders.
	4.2 An initial support package or product manual is produced, if required, to provide guidance for stakeholders who will be required to apply the project results.
	4.3 The support package includes options for stakeholders to take account of environmental and cultural factors in applying project results.
	4.4 Operational and support authorities are consulted to research any testing/trialling/building requirements resulting from the project, and evaluation of any recommendations are included in the project report.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level, required for this unit.

Skill requirements

Look for evidence that confirms skills in:

- leading and mentoring people to achieve project deliverables
- maintaining agreement of stakeholders and team members to timelines, roles and responsibilities

Employability Skills Information

This unit contains employability skills.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements are the essential outcomes of the unit of competency.

Together, performance criteria specify the requirements for competent performance. Text in bold italics is explained in the Range Statement following.

Elements and Performance Criteria

ELEMENT	PERFORMANCE CRITERIA
1. Identify relevant policy	1.1 Work situations that are shaped by government or organisation policy are identified in accordance with public sector guidelines. 1.2 Policy relating to particular work situations is identified and located.
2. Implement policy	2.1 Policy to be implemented is interpreted under direction to identify and plan for change in work practices. 2.2 The implications of policy for individual work practices are identified, and practices are confirmed/adjusted to reflect policy requirements in accordance with organisational procedures. 2.3 Others affected by policy requirements are supported to accommodate those requirements. 2.4 Policy is implemented to support achievement of outcomes intended in specific work areas.
3. Monitor and report on policy implementation	3.1 Information that will assist with the evaluation of the effectiveness of policy implementation is gathered, recorded and reported under direction in accordance with organisational procedures. 3.2 Information that will assist with the evaluation of the impact of policy implementation on organisational outcomes is gathered, recorded and reported under direction in accordance with organisational procedures.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the essential skills and knowledge and their level, required for this unit.

Skill requirements

Look for evidence that confirms skills in:

- reading complex and formal documents such as policy and legislation and providing information on their application
- researching and providing information
- preparing written reports requiring accuracy of expression and language and structures suited to the intended audience
- working with legislation drafters and legal advisers
- writing guidelines in plain English
- working as a member of a team to consult on and prepare policy guidelines
- adjusting communication to suit different audiences
- responding to diversity, including gender and disability
- gathering and analysing policy feedback
- accessing policies and legislation electronically or in hard copy
- identifying and addressing the environmental and occupational health and safety implications of policy/s being implemented

Knowledge requirements

Look for evidence that confirms knowledge and understanding of:

- practices and procedures for developing policy guidelines
- policy feedback mechanisms
- current organisation policies
- whole of government policies and international policy obligations that impact on organisation policy
- organisation and government procedures and protocols
- public sector code/s of ethics and code/s of conduct
- equal employment opportunity, equity and diversity principles
- environmental and occupational health and safety implications of policy/s being implemented

Evidence Guide

The Evidence Guide specifies the evidence required to demonstrate achievement in the unit of competency as a whole. It must be read in conjunction with the Unit descriptor, Performance Criteria, the Range Statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Public Sector Training Package.

Units to be assessed together

- Co-requisite units that must be assessed with this unit:Nil
- Co-assessed units that may be assessed with this unit to increase the efficiency and realism of the assessment process include, but are not limited to, public sector generalist and specialist units in the Certificate IV in Government.

Choice from the following is recommended:

- PSPGOV402B Deliver and monitor service to clients
- PSPGOV403B Use resources to achieve work unit goals
- PSPGOV408A Value diversity
- PSPGOV422A Apply government processes
- PSPREG407B Produce formal record of interview
- PSPREG410B Give evidence
- PSPPROC409A Receive and select offers

Overview of evidence requirements

In addition to integrated demonstration of the elements and their related performance criteria, look for evidence that confirms:

- the knowledge requirements of this unit
- the skill requirements of this unit
- application of the Employability Skills as they relate to this unit (see Employability Summaries in Qualifications Framework)
- policy implementation supported in a range of (2 or more) contexts (or occasions, over time)

Resources required to carry out assessment

These resources include:

- relevant policy and legislation
- public sector standards, procedures and protocols
- policy guidelines

Where and how to assess evidence

Valid assessment of this unit requires:

- a workplace environment or one that closely resembles normal work practice and replicates the range of conditions likely to be encountered when supporting policy implementation, including coping with difficulties, irregularities and breakdowns in routine
- policy implementation supported in a range of (2 or more) contexts (or occasions, over time)

Assessment methods should reflect workplace demands, such as literacy, and the needs of particular groups, such as:

- people with disabilities
- people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people
- women
- young people
- older people
- people in rural and remote locations

Assessment methods suitable for valid and reliable assessment of this competency may include, but are not limited to, a combination of 2 or more of:

- case studies
- portfolios
- projects
- questioning
- scenarios
- authenticated evidence from the workplace and/or training courses

For consistency of assessment	Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments

Range Statement

The Range Statement provides information about the context in which the unit of competency is carried out. The variables cater for differences between States and Territories and the Commonwealth, and between organisations and workplaces. They allow for different work requirements, work practices and knowledge. The Range Statement also provides a focus for assessment. It relates to the unit as a whole. Text in bold italics in the Performance Criteria is explained here.

Work situations may include:	• processes • outcomes • priorities • client services • core business • service delivery mode/s • organisational structure
Policy may include:	• government policy • organisation policy

Unit Descriptor

This unit covers the expenditure of public monies for simple procurement of low value/low risk goods and services using contractual arrangements that include simple tendering and requests for quotation. The unit requires analysis and decision making in the procurement process, which is undertaken under limited supervision. It includes planning and undertaking procurement, managing contractors and completing contractual arrangements.

In practice, procuring goods and services overlaps with other generalist and specialist public sector or local government work activities, such as upholding and supporting the values and principles of public service, identifying and treating risks, exercising delegations, applying government processes, encouraging compliance with legislation in the public sector or local government, planning procurement, developing and distributing requests for offers, selecting providers and managing contracts.

This unit is not recommended for those who specialise in procurement. It cannot be included in the Certificate IV in Government (Procurement and Contracting).

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to those who enter into contracts or go out to tender or manage the procurement but are not procurement professionals. Those undertaking this unit may be developing a request for tender but procurement is not a major part of their role.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Plan for procurement of goods or services.	1.1. Market assessment is used to identify and select options for procuring goods or services in accordance with business plan requirements, legislation, policy and procedures, and probity requirements. 1.2. Commercial strategy is identified to achieve the procurement outcome set out in the business plan, achieve value for money, and meet legal and probity requirements. 1.3. Risk planning is conducted for the procurement activity according to procedures, delegations and guidelines. 1.4. Process and criteria for evaluation of offers from suppliers or service providers are identified to meet public sector probity requirements, and are recorded in a tender evaluation plan. 1.5. Procurement plan is developed to manage procurement process and contractual arrangements in accordance with legislation, policy and procedures, and probity requirements.

	1.6. Stakeholders are consulted about the planned procurement and their feedback is incorporated into the procurement process.
2. Undertake procurement.	2.1. Method for requesting and receiving offers is chosen to suit the procurement activity and comply with organisational policy and procedures and probity requirements. 2.2. Specialist expertise is used to assist in evaluation of offers as required. 2.3. Evaluation and selection of the offer are made according to tender evaluation plan, and organisational policy and procedures. 2.4. Notification of successful and unsuccessful suppliers/providers is undertaken according to procurement plan, and organisational policy and procedures. 2.5. Work does not commence and payment is not made until contractual arrangements are formalised. 2.6. Contractual arrangements that are legally binding to all parties and suitable to the procurement activity are negotiated, formalised and reported according to organisational policy and procedures.
3. Manage contractors.	3.1. Communication strategies are established to build and maintain relationships with contractors. 3.2. Performance is monitored against contract performance indicators for quality assurance of the goods or services and to ensure compliance with contract specifications. 3.3. Contract performance indicators are regularly reviewed to ensure relevance. 3.4. Approvals are obtained for contract variations according to organisational and contractual requirements. 3.5. Disputes or complaints are investigated, documented and resolved or referred according to contractual provisions. 3.6. Contractual obligations to contractors are met. 3.7. Records are maintained according to organisational and legal requirements to provide an audit trail and for other organisational purposes.
4. Complete contractual arrangements.	4.1. Goods and services received are confirmed as meeting contractual specification and required outcome, and accounts are processed for payment according to organisational procedures.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

4.2. Contracts are finalised, cancelled or terminated according to contractual arrangements.

4.3. Contract performance, outcomes and management processes are evaluated, and lessons learnt are recorded and used to inform ongoing contract management practices.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- communication skills to:
  - write procurement specifications in unambiguous terms
  - consult and negotiate with providers
  - write, read and/or sign contractual agreements that may include complexity of language and style, using templates where appropriate
  - engage in ongoing communication with contractors that may involve explaining or clarifying written and oral information, note-taking at meetings, active listening, and checking for understanding
  - provide feedback
- teamwork skills to:
  - work independently or under direction as appropriate to the situation
  - model team leadership approaches if appropriate
  - respond to diversity
  - refer issues to the correct person
- problem-solving skills to:
  - evaluate procurement options and select the most suitable option
  - assess goods or services provided against specifications
- initiative and enterprise skills to apply OHS, environmental, sustainability and corporate social responsibility practices in the context of government procurement activities
- planning and organising skills to:
  - manage contractor performance against contract requirements
  - make payments and manage financial arrangements
- learning skills to keep up-to-date with relevant procurement legislation, policies and procedures
- technology skills to:
  - operate organisational IT systems
  - use electronic procurement templates

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Required knowledge

- commonwealth, state or territory, and local government legislation, policies, practices and guidelines:
  - relating to contract management, including environmental purchasing and corporate social responsibility guidance
  - such as OHS and equity and diversity
- organisational procurement policies, practices and approval processes
- organisation's code of conduct and code of ethics
- procurement options and methods
- probity and ethical issues
- codes of conduct, codes of practice and standards of individual behaviour relating to procuring goods and services, in particular identifying and managing conflict of interest, gifts and inappropriate relationships with providers
- procedures for receipt and payment of goods or services
- common use arrangements
- procurement approval procedures
- financial accountability requirements
- aspects of contract law, laws of tort, trade practices law, commercial law and other legislation relating to receipt and evaluation of offers, negotiation and award of contracts

Evidence Guide

The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment	Competency must be demonstrated in the ability to procure goods and services consistently in accordance with legislative and organisational requirements.
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Assessment must confirm the ability to: • plan a procurement activity, using templates where these are available, to a level of detail commensurate with the complexity and risk profile of the procurement • implement the procurement plan in a way that reflects the legislative and policy environment applicable to the organisation • develop a suitable contract management plan, using templates if available • manage the performance of contractors to ensure that the goods or services are delivered in accordance with the contract

- act within own delegations and refer issues to higher authority when necessary.

Consistency in performance

Competency should be demonstrated by providing evidence of undertaking a range of relevant work tasks in an actual or simulated procurement environment on at least two separate occasions.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

The unit of competency is to be assessed in the workplace or a simulated workplace environment.

Access may be required to:

- legislation, policy, procedures and protocols relating to procuring goods and services
- codes of conduct and codes of practice
- workplace scenarios and case studies relating to a range of procurement activities
- case studies that incorporate dilemmas, and probity requirements relating to procurement of goods and services.

Method of assessment

The following assessment methods are suggested:

- questions to assess understanding of relevant legislation and procedures
- review of strategies selected for procurement
- review of procurement plans, requests for quotation/tender, tender evaluation plans, selection reports, contracts, contract management plans and reports, and other documentation prepared by the candidate in a range of contexts
- feedback from peers or supervisors on actions taken to monitor and review contract performance.

In all cases, practical assessment should be supported by questions to assess underpinning knowledge and those aspects of competency which are difficult to assess directly. Questioning techniques should suit the language and literacy levels of the candidate.

Guidance information for assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments.

Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example:

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Interpret procurement requirements	1.1. Consultation is undertaken with stakeholders to determine whether viable alternatives to procurement exist that address identified business need, to define and clarify requirements, and to justify the procurement decision. 1.2. Scoping of procurement requirements is conducted identifying outcomes, objectives and logistics/supply chain factors. 1.3. Market analysis is conducted to identify factors that may impact on procurement decisions. 1.4. Procurement approvals and appropriations are confirmed for whole-of-life of the activity. 1.5. Information on sources of supply is accessed to determine possible providers and any conflict of interest is identified and resolved. 1.6. Planned provider contract arrangements are specified in accordance with legislation, policy and probity requirements. 1.7. Issues and opportunities are investigated for integration into procurement activity.
2. Plan procurement activities	2.1. Procurement requirement that meets legislative, policy and probity requirements is outlined from transition to close-out.

	2.2. Opportunities to obtain stakeholder input at all stages of the procurement process are actively planned. 2.3. Resource requirements are confirmed and committed in a timely manner and responsible authorities are nominated. 2.4. Strategies for briefing potential bidders are included when required, are practical and meet probity requirements of fairness and impartiality, public sector standards and organisational protocols. 2.5. Consideration is given to environmental and sustainability practices along with corporate social responsibility practices at all stages of the procurement process.
3. Develop procurement plans	3.1. Procurement approval documentation and procurement plan are developed and approved which contain relevant detail about the procurement process and desired business outcomes, according to organisational policy and public sector standards. 3.2. Stakeholder input is sought at all stages during the development of the procurement plan. 3.3. Probity risks in the procurement process are expressly considered during the development of the procurement plan. 3.4. Approved procurement plan or strategy is communicated to stakeholders.

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Specify procurement requirement.	1.1. Scoping of requirement is undertaken to identify outcomes, objectives and practical requirements. 1.2. Statement of requirement is prepared that meets organisational requirements for format and content and is acceptable to stakeholders. 1.3. Needs of clients, end users and other stakeholders are considered and incorporated into statement of requirement. 1.4. Procurement outcome is fair to, and achievable by, potential providers. 1.5. Planned provider contract arrangements are specified according to policy and guidelines. 1.6. Standards of performance and codes of practice, incentives, disincentives and performance measures are specified.
2. Develop request for offers.	2.1. Request for offers and contractual conditions suitable for procurement activity are developed and clarified with clients, providers and/or experts as necessary. 2.2. Contractual conditions suitable for procurement activity are developed and clarified with clients, providers and/or experts as necessary. 2.3. When possible and appropriate, input on content of

The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment

Competency must be demonstrated in the development and distribution of requests for offers; performed consistently and in accordance with legislative and organisational requirements.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit

Assessment must confirm the ability to:

- consult with stakeholders to develop a specification suited to the particular procurement being completed
- develop request for offer documentation, using templates where available
- develop offer evaluation plans with suitable evaluation criteria and evaluation process, using templates where available
- manage the release of requests for offers to industry
- manage the receipt of responses from industry
- apply probity principles relevant to this stage of the procurement process

Consistency in performance

Competency should be demonstrated by providing evidence of undertaking a range of relevant work tasks in an actual or simulated procurement environment on at least two separate occasions.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

The unit of competency is to be assessed in the workplace or a simulated workplace environment.

Access may be required to:

- legislation, policy, procedures and protocols relating to procurement of goods and services
- codes of conduct and codes of practice
- workplace scenarios and case studies relating to a range of procurement activities associated with developing and distributing requests for offers
- case studies that incorporate dilemmas, and probity requirements relating to developing and distributing requests for offers

Method of assessment

The following assessment methods are suggested:

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- questions to assess understanding of relevant legislation and procedures
- review of strategies and approaches adopted for developing and distributing requests for offers
- review of requests for offers (including specifications), offer evaluation plans, industry briefs, risk assessments and other documentation prepared by the candidate in a range of contexts
- review of stakeholder engagement strategies used by the candidate.

In all cases, practical assessment should be supported by questions to assess underpinning knowledge and those aspects of competency which are difficult to assess directly. Questioning techniques should suit the language and literacy levels of the candidate.

Guidance information for assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments.

Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example:

- PSPETHC401A Uphold and support the values and principles of public service
- PSPGOV417A Identify and treat risks
- PSPGOV421A Exercise delegations
- PSPLEGN401A Encourage compliance with legislation in the public sector
- PSPPROC411A Plan procurement
- PSPPROC413A Select providers and develop contracts
- PSPPROC414A Manage contracts.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Practical requirements may include:

- phases or stages of the procurement activity
- timeframes

Unit Descriptor

This unit covers the ability to select preferred providers as a result of a formal request for offer process. It includes evaluating offers, selecting preferred providers, obtaining approvals, developing and formalising contractual arrangements, and debriefing the market and other stakeholders.

In practice, selecting providers overlaps with other generalist and specialist public sector and local government work activities, such as upholding and supporting the values and principles of public service, identifying and treating risks, exercising delegations, applying government processes, encouraging compliance with legislation in the public sector or local government, planning procurement, developing and distributing requests for offers and managing contracts.

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

The unit applies to those who undertake the selection of providers, including those who specialise in procurement.

Unit Descriptor

This unit covers the competency required by people whose primary role is contract management to implement strategies that ensure effective contract performance. It includes managing the business relationship, performance of the contract, and contract issues; and implementing a communication strategy.

In practice, managing contract performance may overlap with other public sector and local government generalist and specialist work activities, such as promoting the values and ethos of public service or local government, undertaking negotiations, promoting compliance with legislation in the public sector, finalising contracts, managing procurement risk, planning to manage a contract, planning for procurement outcomes and making procurement decisions.

PSPPROC414A Manage contracts is the appropriate unit for people undertaking contract management as a minor part of their work role.

No licensing, legislative, regulatory or certification requirements apply to this unit at the time of endorsement.

Application of the Unit

This unit applies to those who may or may not have had involvement in the procurement process preceding execution of the contract.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Complete contracts	1.1. Contracts due to expire are reviewed to determine future requirements, and options for meeting those requirements are canvassed in sufficient time for decision making and transition to occur. 1.2. Strategies are implemented to manage closure, renewal of contracts, or transition to a new contract according to organisational guidelines, probity requirements and public sector standards. 1.3. Contracts are finalised, amended, cancelled or terminated according to contractual arrangements. 1.4. Consultation is undertaken with contractor, and a contract completion report is issued addressing the performance of contractor and contract manager according to organisational requirements and public sector standards.
2. Implement contract review strategy	2.1. Timing of contract review is determined to ensure a smooth transition to post-contract arrangements. 2.2. Contract review is undertaken covering contract management, contractor performance relevant to measures at each stage of the contract, user satisfaction and audit results. 2.3. Where measures or outcomes are not met in full, variances are documented and explained.

Evidence Guide

The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment

Competency must be demonstrated in the ability to plan to manage a contract consistently in accordance with legislative and organisational requirements.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit

Assessment must confirm the ability to:

- develop a contract management strategy in consultation with key stakeholders
- develop a contract management plan suited to more complex contracts, using templates if available, which may include sub-plans such as risk, transition and probity
- implement the contract management strategy and the contract management plan
- develop and maintain a sound business relationship with internal and external stakeholders
- manage the performance of contractors to ensure the effective delivery of value for money outcomes under the contract
- manage more complex contract disputes to achieve prompt resolution and refer to higher authority when necessary
- review contract throughout to identify opportunities for continuous improvement
- act within own delegations and refer issues to higher authority when necessary.

Consistency in performance

Competency should be demonstrated by providing evidence of undertaking a range of relevant work tasks in an actual or simulated procurement environment on at least two separate occasions.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

The unit of competency is to be assessed in the workplace or a simulated workplace environment.

Access may be required to:

- legislation, policy, procedures and protocols relating to procuring goods and services and managing contracts

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

- codes of conduct and codes of practice
- workplace scenarios and case studies relating to a range of procurement activities associated with planning to manage a contract
- case studies that incorporate dilemmas, and probity requirements relating to planning to manage a contract.

Method of assessment

The following assessment methods are suggested:

- questions to assess understanding of relevant legislation and procedures
- review of strategies and approaches adopted for planning to manage a contract
- review of contract management plans, contracts, probity plans, budgets, transition plans, approvals and sign-offs, and other documentation prepared by the candidate in a range of contexts
- review of stakeholder engagement approaches adopted by the candidate.

In all cases, practical assessment should be supported by questions to assess underpinning knowledge and those aspects of competency which are difficult to assess directly. Questioning techniques should suit the language and literacy levels of the candidate.

Guidance information for assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments.

Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example:

- PSPETHC501B Promote the values and ethos of public service
- PSPGOV507A Undertake negotiations
- PSPLEGN501B Promote compliance with legislation in the public sector
- PSPPROC503B Manage contract performance
- PSPPROC504B Finalise contracts
- PSPPROC505A Manage procurement risk
- PSPPROC507A Plan for procurement outcomes
- PSPPROC508A Make procurement decisions.

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Manage contract establishment	1.1. Requirements of contracts and strategic initiatives are discussed, clarified and agreed by all parties. 1.2. Responsibilities for establishing and carrying out procedures are assigned to achieve contract outcomes. 1.3. Effective communication strategies and processes are established and implemented to assist ongoing communication between internal and external stakeholders and contractors. 1.4. Relationship management is undertaken of all levels of personnel involved in procurement and contract management, within probity boundaries. 1.5. Strategic relationships are established and managed within probity boundaries to improve procurement capability and performance. 1.6. Risk management plans are updated according to organisational policy and procedures.
2. Manage contract performance	2.1. Progress of contracts is monitored against set targets and performance measures to ensure success of procurement activities. 2.2. Should monitoring find that set targets, performance measures and probity requirements are not being met, action is taken to rectify performance in a timely manner. 2.3. Advice and support are provided to solve problems, make improvements and maintain progress. 2.4. Disputes are managed promptly according to contractual conditions to achieve resolution and maintain contract performance and progress. 2.5. Opportunities to continuously improve procurement outcomes are sought and negotiated with contractors. 2.6. Approvals are provided or gained for contract variations that are negotiated and agreed between the parties. 2.7. Opportunities are provided for stakeholders and contractors to have input into and receive feedback on progress during the performance of the contract. 2.8. Internal and external stakeholders are engaged as necessary throughout the life of the contract to maintain progress.

3. Manage contract evaluation	3.1. Evaluation of contract performance is undertaken relative to planned performance measures and in consultation with stakeholders and contractors. 3.2. Where stakeholders and contractors do not agree, dispute resolution is undertaken according to organisational policy and procedures. 3.3. Conclusions are detailed against agreed criteria to provide a complete picture of performance of contractors, organisation's procurement processes and value for money. 3.4. Performance of strategic initiatives is measured relative to planned outcomes in consultation with industry and other stakeholders. 3.5. Lessons learnt from evaluations of contracts and strategic initiatives are documented according to organisational requirements and used to continuously improve future procurement activities. 3.6. Contractors and stakeholders are advised of evaluation outcomes in a timely manner according to organisational guidelines.

Evidence Guide

The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.

Overview of assessment

Competency must be demonstrated in managing strategic contracts consistently and in accordance with legislative and organisational requirements.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit

Assessment must confirm the ability to:

- develop contract management plans and sub-plans suited to the nature of the contracts
- establish contract management relationships with stakeholders using strategic techniques such as start up workshops, service level agreements, etc.
- implement contract management plans
- manage contractors to ensure the delivery of contract outcomes, using flexibility and initiative to deal with issues as they arise
- implement contract performance measures
- provide contractors with performance feedback
- deal promptly and proactively with contract disputes and refer to higher authority when this is not possible
- communicate effectively with internal and external stakeholders about the operation of contracts
- uphold probity standards in all dealings with contractors.

Consistency in performance

Competency should be demonstrated by providing evidence of undertaking a range of relevant work tasks in an actual or simulated procurement environment on at least two separate occasions.

Context of and specific resources for assessment

The unit of competency is to be assessed in the workplace or a simulated workplace environment.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

Access may be required to:

- legislation, policy, procedures and protocols relating to managing strategic contracts
- codes of conduct and codes of practice
- long-term government policy papers, such as White Papers
- strategic procurement plans and direction statements
- workplace scenarios and case studies relating to a range of strategic procurement and disposal activities.

Method of assessment

The following assessment methods are suggested:

- questions to assess understanding of relevant legislation and procedures
- review of strategies and approaches adopted for managing strategic contracts
- review of contract management plans and related sub-plans, such as transition plans, probity plans, contract variations, contract performance reports and reviews, budgets, negotiation notes from meetings with contractors, risk assessments, formal sign-offs and approvals, contract closure reports, and other documentation prepared or reviewed by the candidate in a range of contexts
- review of stakeholder engagement approaches adopted by the candidate.

In all cases, practical assessment should be supported by questions to assess underpinning knowledge and those aspects of competency which are difficult to assess directly. Candidates for this qualification must demonstrate a high level of understanding and practical workplace application of underpinning knowledge. Questioning techniques should suit the language and literacy levels of the candidate.

Guidance information for assessment

Evidence must be gathered over time in a range of contexts to ensure the person can achieve the unit outcome and apply the competency in different situations or environments.

Holistic assessment with other units relevant to the industry sector, workplace and job role is recommended, for example:

- PSPETHC601B Maintain and enhance confidence in public service
- PSPLEGN601B Manage compliance with legislation in the public sector
- PSPMNGT607B Develop a business case

Required Skills and Knowledge

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- observation skills to observe candidate performance
- cognitive and interpretation skills to ensure collection of valid and reliable evidence
- organisational skills to collect evidence
- time-management skills to schedule assessment events and activities
- literacy skills to:
  - read and interpret relevant information
  - prepare required documentation and collate evidence in required format
- communication skills to:
  - discuss evidence-gathering processes with practitioners and candidates
  - provide constructive and supportive feedback
  - ask appropriate questions to clarify and confirm instructions for evidence gathering
  - provide clear and concrete options and advice.

Required knowledge

- competency-based assessment, including:
  - criterion referenced
  - competency standards as the benchmarks for assessment
  - competency-based reporting
- principles of assessment
- rules of quality evidence
- different purposes of assessment
- diversity of assessment contexts
- evidence, including different types of evidence
- evidence-gathering methods – what are assessment methods and different types of methods
- purpose and features of assessment tools and assessment plans

Range Statement

The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Purpose of assessment may be:	• recognise current existing competency of candidates • determine if competency has been achieved following learning • establish candidate progress towards achievement of competence • determine language, literacy and numeracy needs of candidate • certify competence through a Statement of Attainment • establish progress towards a qualification • determine training gaps of candidate • measure work performance • classify employee and support career progression • meet organisational requirements for work, such as operating equipment or developing new skills • satisfy licensing or regulatory requirements.
Relevant people must include:	• qualified assessors • candidates.
Benchmarks for assessment:	• refer to criteria against which candidate is assessed • may be a competency standard/unit of competency, assessment criteria of course curricula, performance specifications, or product specifications.
Assessment plan must include:	• purpose and aims of assessment • context of assessment • relevant benchmarks for assessment • other assessment information and documentation identified as relevant.
Assessment system policies and procedures may include:	• candidate selection • rationale and purpose of competency-based assessment • assessment records, data management and information management • recognition of current competency, recognition of prior learning and credit arrangements.
Assessment tools include:	• the learning or competency unit(s) to be assessed • the target group, context and conditions for the assessment • the tasks to be administered to the candidate • an outline of the evidence to be gathered from the candidate • the evidence criteria used to judge the quality of performance

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

	(i.e. the assessment decision-making rules) • the administration, recording and reporting requirements • the evidence of how validity and reliability have been tested and built into the design and use of the tool.
Assessment context may include:	• environment in which assessment will be carried out • relationship between units of competency and candidate's workplace • time period over which assessment takes place.

Reasonable adjustments may include:	• taking into account candidate's language, literacy and numeracy requirements
	• providing personal support services, such as arranging for:
	  • member of the community to accompany the candidate
	  • reader
	  • interpreter
	  • attendant carer
	  • scribe
	• using adaptive technology or special equipment
	• providing flexible assessment sessions to allow for such things as fatigue or administering of medication
	• format of assessment materials, such as:
	  • in Braille
	  • in first language
	  • use of audiotape or videotape
	• making adjustments to the physical environment
	• revising proposed assessment methods and instruments
	• considering age and gender
	• considering cultural beliefs, traditional practices and religious observances.

Resource requirements may include:	• resources specific to evidence-gathering activities • access to assessors • access to policy and procedures • access to subject and technical experts • OHS requirements • plant, equipment and technology.

Assessment instruments may include:	• instruments developed by an assessor as part of formative or summative assessment activities, including:
	  • profiles of acceptable performance measures
	  • templates and proformas
	  • specific questions or activities
	  • evidence and observation checklists
	  • checklists for the evaluation of work samples

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment	Assessment must address the scope of this unit and reflect all components of the unit. A range of appropriate assessment methods and evidence-gathering techniques must be used to determine competency. A judgement of competency should only be made when the assessor is confident that the required outcomes of the unit have been achieved and that consistent performance has been demonstrated.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the ability to:
	• carry out aminimum of three training sessions, involving demonstrating and instructing particular work skills for different groups; with each session addressing:
	  • different learning objectives
	  • a range of techniques and effective communication skills appropriate to the audience.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Evidence must be gathered in the workplace wherever possible. Where no workplace is available, a simulated workplace must be provided.
Method of assessment
Guidance information for assessment	For further information about assessment of this and other TAE units, refer to relevant implementation guidance published on the IBSA website (www.ibsa.org.au).

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.
Learner characteristics may include:	• language, literacy and numeracy levels • learning styles • past learning and work experiences • specific needs • workplace culture.
Safe learning environment may include:	• exit requirements • personal protective equipment • safe access • safe use of equipment.

Instruction and demonstration objectives may include:	• competencies to be achieved
	• generic and technical skills, which may be:
	  • provided by the organisation
	  • developed by a colleague
	  • individual or group objectives
	  • learning outcomes.

Learning resources may include:	• any material used to support learning, such as:
	  • learner and user guides
	  • trainer and facilitator guides
	  • example training programs
	  • specific case studies
	  • professional development materials
	  • assessment materials
	• a variety of formats
	• those produced locally
	• those acquired from other sources.

Learning materials may include:	• handouts for learners • materials sourced from the workplace, e.g. workplace documentation, operating procedures, and specifications.
Details may include:	• location and time • outcomes of instruction or demonstration • reason for instruction or demonstration • who will be attending instruction session.

© Commonwealth of Australia, 2025 Future Skills Organisation

RANGE STATEMENT
OHS procedures may include:	• emergency procedures • hazards and their means of control • incident reporting • use of personal protective equipment • safe work practices • safety briefings • site-specific safety rules.
Delivery techniques may include:	• coaching • demonstration • explanation • group or pair work • providing opportunities to practise skills and solve problems • questions and answers.
Coaching may include:	• learning arrangements requiring immediate interaction and feedback • on-the-job instruction and 'buddy' systems • relationships targeting enhanced performance • short-term learning arrangements • working on a one-to-one basis.
Measures may include:	• informal review or discussion • learner survey • on-the-job observation • review of peer coaching arrangements.

Elements and Performance Criteria Pre-Content

Elements describe the essential outcomes of a unit of competency.	Performance criteria describe the performance needed to demonstrate achievement of the element. Where bold italicised text is used, further information is detailed in the required skills and knowledge section and the range statement. Assessment of performance is to be consistent with the evidence guide.

Elements and Performance Criteria

1. Interpret learning environment and delivery requirements	1.1. Access, read and interpret learning program documentation to determine delivery requirements 1.2. Use available information and documentation to identify group and individual learner needs and learner characteristics 1.3. Identify and assess constraints and risks to delivery 1.4. Confirm personal role and responsibilities in planning and delivering training with relevant personnel
2. Prepare session plans	2.1. Refine existing learning objectives according to program requirements and specific needs of individual learners 2.2. Develop session plans and document these for each segment of the learning program 2.3. Use knowledge of learning principles and theories to generate ideas for managing session delivery
3. Prepare resources for delivery	3.1. Contextualise existing learning materials to meet the needs of the specific learner group 3.2. Finalise learning materials and organise facility, technology and equipment needs in time for delivery of learning sessions 3.3. Confirm overall delivery arrangements with relevant personnel
4. Deliver and facilitate training sessions	4.1. Conduct each session according to session plan, modified where appropriate to meet learner needs 4.2. Use the diversity of the group as another resource to support learning 4.3. Employ a range of delivery methods as training aids to optimise learner experiences 4.4. Demonstrate effective facilitation skills to ensure effective participation and group management

5. Support and monitor learning	5.1. Monitor and document learner progress to ensure outcomes are being achieved and individual learner needs are being met 5.2. Make adjustments to the delivery sessions to reflect specific needs and circumstances 5.3. Manage inappropriate behaviour to ensure learning can take place 5.4. Maintain and store learner records according to organisational requirements

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

This section describes the skills and knowledge required for this unit.

Required skills

- presentation skills to ensure delivery is engaging and relevant, including:
  - synthesising information and ideas
  - preparing equipment, such as data projectors and computer presentation applications
  - speaking with appropriate tone and pitch
  - using language appropriate to audience
  - encouraging and dealing appropriately with questions
- group facilitation skills to ensure that:
  - every individual has an opportunity for participation and input
  - group cohesion is maintained
  - behaviour that puts others at risk is observed, interpreted and addressed
  - discussion and group interaction are enhanced
- conflict resolution and negotiation skills to:
  - identify critical points, issues, concerns and problems
  - identify options for changing behaviours
- oral communication and language skills to:

REQUIRED SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE
• motivate learners to transfer skills and knowledge • engage with the learner • interpersonal skills to maintain appropriate relationships and ensure inclusivity • observation skills to monitor individual and group progress
Required knowledge

• introductory knowledge of learning theories
• sound knowledge of learning principles
• sound knowledge of learner styles
• industry area and subject matter of the delivery
• learner group profile, including characteristics and needs of individual learners in the group
• content and requirements of the learning program and/or delivery plan
• different delivery methods and techniques appropriate to face-to-face group delivery
• techniques for the recognition and resolution of inappropriate behaviours
• behaviours in learners that may indicate learner difficulties
• organisational record-management systems and reporting requirements
• evaluation and revision techniques
• specific resources, equipment and support services available for learners with special needs
• relevant policy, legal requirements, codes of practice and national standards, including commonwealth and state or territory legislation that may affect training and assessment in the vocational education and training sector
• OHS relating to the facilitation of group-based learning, including:
  • assessment and risk control measures
  • reporting requirements for hazards
  • safe use and maintenance of relevant equipment
  • emergency procedures
  • sources of OHS information
  • role of key workplace persons
• policies and procedures relevant to the learning environment

Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment	Assessment must address the scope of this unit and reflect all components of the unit. Arange of appropriate assessment methods and evidence-gathering techniques must be used to determine competency. A judgement of competency should only be made when the assessor is confident that the required outcomes of the unit have been achieved and that consistent performance has been demonstrated.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the ability to:
	• facilitate group-based learning by preparing and delivering a series of training sessions, including:
	  • at least two consecutive sessions, of a duration commensurate with a substantive training session (e.g. 40-60 minutes), that follow one of the learning program designs
	  • at least one session delivered to a different learner group, with evidence of how the characteristics and needs of this group were addressed
	• identify and respond to diversity and individual needs
	• access and use documented resources and support personnel to guide inclusive practices.

Context of and specific resources for assessment	Evidence must be gathered in the workplace wherever possible. Where no workplace is available, a simulated workplace must be provided. Assessment must ensure access to: • training products, such as training packages and accredited course documentation.

Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.

Learning program documentation may include:	• competencies or other benchmarks to be achieved
	• for each chunk or segment of the learning program:
	  • specific learning outcomes derived from the benchmarks
	  • overview of content to be covered
	  • learning resources, learning materials and activities
	  • delivery methods
	• number and duration of training sessions or classes required, and overall timelines
	• OHS issues to be addressed in delivery
	• identification of assessment points to measure learner progress
	• assessment methods and tools to be used to collect evidence of competency, where assessment is required.

Session plans may include:	• outline of objectives and content to be addressed • plan of delivery methods and learning activities to be used within the session • timelines and duration for each learning activity • formative assessment points and opportunities • learning materials required.
Inappropriate behaviour may include:	• violent or inappropriate language • verbal or physical abuse or bullying • insensitive verbal or physical behaviour towards other learners or the trainer/facilitator, including cultural, racial, disability or gender-based insensitivities • dominant or overbearing behaviour • disruptive behaviour • non-compliance with safety instructions.

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE

The evidence guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required knowledge and skills, the range statement and the assessment guidelines for this Training Package.

Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	• The evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit must be relevant to and satisfy all of the requirements of the elements and performance criteria of this unit and include demonstration of applying:
	  • the underpinning knowledge and skills
	  • relevant legislation and workplace procedures
	  • other relevant aspects of the range statement

Context of and specific resources for assessment	• Performance is demonstrated consistently over a period of time and in a suitable range of contexts
	• Resources for assessment include:
	  • a range of relevant exercises, case studies and/or other simulated practical and knowledge assessment, and/or
	  • access to an appropriate range of relevant operational situations in the workplace
	• In both real and simulated environments, access is required to:
	  • relevant and appropriate materials and equipment, and
	  • applicable documentation including workplace procedures, regulations, codes of practice and operation manuals

Method of assessment	• Assessment of this unit must be undertaken by a registered training organisation • As a minimum, assessment of knowledge must be conducted through appropriate written/oral tests • Practical assessment must occur: • through activities in an appropriately simulated

Evidence Guide

EVIDENCE GUIDE
The Evidence Guide provides advice on assessment and must be read in conjunction with the performance criteria, required skills and knowledge, range statement and the Assessment Guidelines for the Training Package.
Overview of assessment
Critical aspects for assessment and evidence required to demonstrate competency in this unit	Evidence of the ability to: • analyse and clearly explain the role of credit within the community • analyse and clearly explain the different types of consumer credit options currently available • analyse and clearly explain the associated implications and risks of the various credit schemes available, as well as the implication of establishing a poor credit reference history.
Context of and specific resources for assessment	Assessment must ensure: • competency is demonstrated in the context of the the range statement • access to and the use of a range of common office equipment, technology, software and consumables • access to internet to source information.
Method of assessment	A range of assessment methods should be used to assess practical skills and knowledge. The following examples, in combination, are

Guidance information for assessment

Range Statement

RANGE STATEMENT
The range statement relates to the unit of competency as a whole. It allows for different work environments and situations that may affect performance. Bold italicised wording, if used in the performance criteria, is detailed below. Essential operating conditions that may be present with training and assessment (depending on the work situation, needs of the candidate, accessibility of the item, and local industry and regional contexts) may also be included.
The role of consumer credit includes:	• enabling approved applicants the ability to purchase items (goods and/or services) where the cost of the item exceeds current savings available.

Advantages and disadvantages of credit may include:	• advantages:
	  • obtain and can use purchased item immediately
	  • minimises the need to carry cash or write cheques
	  • allows for instalment payments on expensive items
	  • convenient form of payment when travelling, especially overseas
	• disadvantages:
	  • may increase cost of items purchased due to interest accrued
	  • usually attracts other fees such as account servicing fees
	  • can lead to compulsive buying habits
	  • creates a false sense of wealth.

Consumer credit	• fixed:

RANGE STATEMENT
facilities may include:	• personal loans • leases including mobile phones, cars, business premises, office equipment including personal computers • hire purchase • 'buy now, pay later' schemes • revolving: • credit cards • store cards • overdraft.
Differences between unsecured and secured loans include:	• a secured loan is supported by an underlying asset while an unsecured loan is not • unsecured loans attract higher interest rates due to increased risk to the lending institution.
Implications of default on secured loans include:	• any shortfall in sale of repossessed asset against outstanding loan amount must be paid by borrower • repossession of the underlying asset by the lending institution.
Fees and costs associated with different credit options may include:	• account servicing fees • credit purchase fees • late payment fees • loan establishment fees • withdrawing from a foreign Automatic Teller Machine (i.e. the ATM of a lending institution other than your own).
Fees and costs may be analysed and compared using:	• manually, comparing fees and costs drawn from tables and charts provided by financial institutions and analysed using a calculator • online, web-based, calculation tools • software applications such as spreadsheets.
Ways to compare advertised interest rates may include:	• informing the client of the 'comparison rate' which includes all associated fees and charges.
Strategies to minimise fees on credit may include:	• consolidating savings and credit facilities with the one institution where account servicing fees can be cancelled out • knowing how many free transactions come with the card • paying the minimum monthly instalment on time.
Ways to avoid credit	• not disclosing Personal Identification Number (PIN) to anyone

card fraud include:	• selecting a PIN only the card holder would know • signing the back of the credit card.
Credit reference reports refers to:	• reports established and maintained by credit reference agencies which record all negative events (i.e. defaults) listed by creditors against debtors.
Implications of establishing a poor credit history may include:	• higher interest rate penalties • inability to obtain finance in the future • may disadvantage applications for rental accommodation • necessity to obtain guarantor in future loans.
Methods of obtaining own credit reference file may include:	• writing, emailing or telephoning the relevant agency requesting a copy of your file, having provided relevant details to identify self.
